I have had a splendid season so far. I have 3 pairs of Norwich, 1 pair of Cinnamons, and 2 pairs of Borders. From these I have 16 young ones in the flights, and 9 in the breeding cages (from the first round), and 4 pairs away again from a second turn.—J. DIXON (Choppington).

I have had a splendid first round of 50 youngsters and nearly all away from the parents; and I have about 50 full eggs to hatch out in the second round. I can see some Palace winners amongst the youngsters; anyway, I hope there are. I am still greatly interested in your splendid paper, CAGE BIRDS, and it still has my best recommendation to all fanciers.—A. BROWN (London, N.).

Rumour has it that three promising Scotch Fancy Canaries are on the perch in Whitechurch, and that the fortunate owner has only recently joined the Fancy. Complaints are numerous about empty eggs. Two months of the breeding season are over, and little progress has been effected. Talking to a gentleman, who is a keen observer of wild bird life, he stated that they are later than usual in nesting. Scotch Fancies are in demand, particularly hens.—SCOTCH FANCIER.

Bathgate and District.

Mule and Hybrid breeding in Bathgate and district is forging ahead to some tune. Pioneers again, of course. However, some of the fanciers hereabouts have the required knowledge and experience of the art, and somehow seem to get young birds whenever they try for them from this most interesting branch of aviculture. One fancier in particular has no less than 17 young Mules from a Greenfinch, Siskin, Linnet and Goldfinch, all doing for themselves. This same fancier has other 20 eggs set from the same crosses. Also a clutch of Greenie-Bullie eggs hatching under Canary. Another fancier has three fertile eggs from Goldfinch and Linnet just about to hatch; while another fancier of my acquaintance has set his first clutch of Greenie-Bullie eggs; also a nest of Goldie-Canary eggs is hatching. On the whole there are some splendid pairs put up for Mule and Hybrid breeding in this district this season. —A. T.

Codnor Park and District C.B.S.

Having visited some of our members' rooms I find the majority are doing badly, with the first and second rounds, which no doubt is owing to the severe weather we had in April and May, with very sharp frosts at night. The cry of all has been "cocks not filling eggs" and "dead in the shell." Mr. W. Holmes, our worthy treasurer, has the best of luck, however, for when I visited his rooms my eyes sparkled to see 17 grand young ones (Norwich and Yorkshires) on the sticks, and 13 others in the nests. He is a novice, but some of these will be heard of later, if luck favours him in moulting them. Mr. B. Simpson has had the reverse of luck; he has only 6 young (none on the sticks yet). "Clear eggs" has been his cry. Mr. R. Vertijan has 9 young, some doing well, but he has had several dead in the shell; also mice in the room have spoiled one nest of good eggs. Messrs. C. Martin and J. W. Martin are both doing well with Norwich, some very promising young being amongst them. Mr. Williamson is the proud possessor of one young a week old. There were five pairs sitting when I entered his room, but when I left he had the one young one to console him. I found the five nests all clear, bar one, and that had a young one, but dead. But try the next round, Jack. Mr. Hickson (Yorkshires) is doing badly, as his hens will not feed. Mr. Hubbard has lost 22 young owing to the hens not feeding. As for myself, I have had nothing to complain of seeing that I removed from one house to another just as I had paired up. I lost the first round with one hen, but have got 3 very nice young ones from her the second round. I have three on the sticks doing for themselves, and 6 in the nests, also some good eggs from the Goldfinch and Canary. Mr. Barlow has had the same set-back as the rest—young dying in the shell. I had an invitation over to Mr. J. Driver's room three weeks ago to inspect his noted stock of Norwich, which I heartily accepted. On my arrival we were soon amongst the stock, and what an eye-opener! And the cages, too, were grand, and everything was perfectly clean. I was sorry to see no more young. There were only 7 young from 23 pairs of grand birds. Mr. Driver stated that he couldn't get good eggs owing to the cold weather we were having then; but I hope better luck favours him now the warm weather has come.—J. H. MITCHELL, hon. sec., Codnor Park and D.s. C.B.S.

The Shows.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

The best table show of British birds ever held by the society took place on May 11th, when 33 birds were staged. Mr. Hayling acted as judge, and his awards met with general approval. Considerable interest was taken in a judging competition, ten members entering for it. The winning Goldfinch was so far ahead of its rivals that everyone put it in its right place. Mr. Pounsett is to be congratulated on owning such a Finch, which is, we understand, destined for muling; we wish him luck.

WEST. COUNTIES O.S. (Plymouth)

First of the three annual Nest Feather Shows, held at Boro' Arms Restaurant, Plymouth, on May 18th. Points gained count towards Nest Feather Cups, the two other shows being arranged for June 22nd, and July 20th. Entries numbered 80, being slightly less than at corresponding show of last year, the falling off being in the British section. Norwich were strongest, there being 24 staged, the judge (Mr. Tucker) particularly admiring the 1st and 2nd in clear yellow class. Yorkshires were not up to the average, and most of the Crests could have done with another fortnight to be their best. Mr. Dyer judged Yorkshires, Mr. Tucker Norwich, Mr. J. E. Rowe Crests, Mr. Dart Cinnamon, A.O.V. and Mules, and Mr. Pridham British and Foreign.

Country Rambles

Hull Cage Bird Society.

The annual ramble was held on May 21st, Barton-on-Humber being the destination. It was only a small party consisting of Messrs. Oliver, Calam, Harland, Pepper, Potter, Longhorn, Barwick, Stamford and Son, Parkes, Clayton, Smith, Meadley, Phillips, Calvard, and friend, which crossed the Humber, being met at Barton Station by two Barton members of the society, Messrs. Beeeb and Pettit, who had arranged to pilot the Hull members round the district which abounds in bird life. We found Thrushes' and Blackbirds' eggs and young innumerable, the other species being very scarce, only an odd Linnet, Greenfinch, Chaffinch, Tom Tit, Whitethroat, or Hedge Accentor's nest being come across. A very beautiful find was a nest of the Missel-Thrush containing 5 eggs, and as very few of the party had had the pleasure of seeing this before we were all charmed by the grand colours. One of the members made a unique discovery, this being a Thrush's nest containing 5 eggs, and another complete Thrush's nest built on the top, the eggs in the bottom nest showing clearly through the bottom of the top nest, both being newly-built nests. Tea was taken at the Red Lion Hotel, full justice being done by fourteen hungry fanciers. Mr. Pepper proposed, and Mr. Stamford seconded, a hearty vote of thanks to the host and hostess for the splendid repast provided. Mr. Oliver proposed, and Mr. Harland seconded, a vote of thanks to the Barton members of the society who had so ably piloted their Hull friends round the district, thus giving them the opportunity of passing one of the most pleasant afternoons possible. General regret was expressed that more members were not present, but this was accounted for by the fact of two holidays in one week, Messrs. E. R. Ridley (hon. secretary) and Messrs. D. McKay and Bray being thus detained.—GEO. HARLAND.

Hartlepools C.B.S.

Annual outing held as usual on Whit-Monday to Wynyard Park. On this occasion the members were joined by fancier friends from the Stockton C.B.S., and one of the most successful gatherings ever held in connection with the society was the result. Through the kindness of D. W. Meiklejohn, Esq., the party was again met by the keepers, and forming into four groups, spent a right royal time exploring the beautiful woods. Prior to this, however, everyone looked their best whilst under the gaze of the camera, which was most successfully manipulated by Mr. Broadbent, of Stockton. The ladies of the party were granted the privilege of viewing the Italian gardens, vineries, and hot houses, which were splendidly stocked. The sterner sex the meanwhile were using their best endeavours to creat an unusual appetite for the good things to follow at Walviston, which were provided in Mrs. Balmer's usual sumptuous manner. After between four and five hours' hard work in the woods, the weather being glorious, the gathering of the clans revealed some very interesting "finds." Birds, nests, eggs, and young, of the following species were notified:- Green Woodpecker (whose depredations were a marvel to the unmitiated), Sandpiper, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Chaffinch, Robin, Treecreeper, Blackbird, Thrush, Plover, Partridge, Pheasant, etc. The keeper stated that the Kingfisher was again nesting on the shore of the lake, but none of the party were priviledged to see him as in previous years. After tea the whole party—numbering fifty-two—spent the remainder of the evening in pleasant harmony. Songs were rendered by Mrs. Papple, Miss Ward, Messrs. Grieg, Appleton, Robinson, Gowing, Marwood, and Woodhead. Messrs. Robinson, Freeman, and Woodhead spoke of the friendly feeling that such gatherings were calculated to promote, and suggestions were made that would further cement the friendship begun in May by competitions, etc., in the dark days of December. Mr. Ford was the accompanist.—E. WOODHEAD.

Under the White Rose.

THE C.M.Y.C.C. held their annual general meeting on May 14th. The balance-sheet showed that the year had been an exceptionally good one; 250 fully paid up members are in the books, an increase of about 100 on any previous year, no doubt accounted for by the great attention that has been paid to novices. The society looks for further increase in this direction.

IT was with great regret that the members accepted the resignations of the secretaries, Messrs. Garnett and Towers, as these gentlemen have done much for the club, but no amount of pressure could induce them to continue, and for a time the meeting was at a deadlock. Eventually, however, Messrs. Graysbaw (of Spen Valley) and F. Allen were elected as joint secretaries. No doubt these gentlemen will be good workers (and they are in a good district) for the club, and uphold the position to which it has attained.

NOVICE members of the Yorkshire Union have now every possible inducement held out to them to join the various specialist clubs, the Y.C.C., C.M.Y.C.C., O.N.P.C., and the N.G.M.Y.C.C. having each and all decided to run competitions at Yorkshire Union shows in novice classes. So they have now the great advantage of being able to compete for special club prizes at the same time and at the same shows where they are competing for Yorkshire Union novice medals. Hurry up, novices, and let the various clubs see that you are alive to these inducements. There never was such a time for novices, so don't delay joining, and then say "there's nowt for us."

ONE of the most enthusiastic fanciers of the Yorkshire Canary in the East Riding is Mr. J. Wheldrake, of Goole, and on Whit Tuesday afternoon I had the pleasure of visiting this gentleman's room, and to say that I was delighted would be "drawing it mild." The room is situated at the top of the house, and has a very large window facing south-west, with a splendid view over green fields for as far as you can see; quite an ideal place, no hills like we have in the West Riding, but all level and good walking. The cages are in two or three sizes, good roomy ones for breeding, then some a little larger for the youngsters to romp about in, and also a quantity of nice single holes for old birds (this is where he keeps the show birds, eh?). All have whole 3-ply boards for backs; no red-mite lodging houses here.

THE birds are nearly all Yorkshires, and although not doing as well as Mr. W. would like, were not doing badly; there were some promising birds amongst the youngsters at 5 weeks old or thereabouts. Mr. W. is also keeping two or three Norwich cocks over that should do well. A few good nests were getting on towards 3 weeks old. Altogether the birds are a nice lot, and a credit to their owner.

BRADFORD EAST O.S. had a most enjoyable ramble on Whit-Tuesday. About 40 members and friends, including many ladies, formed the party, and they travelled by train to Wilsden, then went by way of fields and woods to Harden, where tea was partaken. Many nests were found, some with eggs and others containing young. After tea, tracks were made for Bingley. The trees (and there are some very fine ones) and fields being at their best now in this district, make one wish to tarry. The riverside hereabouts is exceptionally well wooded and quite a bird paradise. It was being said that some of the members are doing well at breeding, and that there are some "clinkers" out already; lucky fanciers!

CINNAMON-MARKED Y.C.C.

Annual general meeting held on May 14th, president (Mr. W. Richmond, Rodley) in the chair. The Secretaries presented the report and balance-sheet, and same proved most satisfactory, the year being a record one in every respect. The introduction of Novice Classes caused a great advance in the membership. These two classes received a total entry of 360 birds, giving an average of 30 per show. The four open classes received a total entry of 607, with an average of over 50 per show. The competition in both sections was very keen, and in the open section the result was in doubt right up to the last show. The high standard of excellence in the exhibits was maintained throughout the season. The increase in membership was most pronounced, as is shown by the following figures: 1906-1907, 138 members, 1907-1908 156, 1908-1909 162, and 1909-1910 250. The year was commenced with a balance in hand of 1s. 4½d. The sum of £4 13s. was subscribed as a "Specials Fund," the following being the contributors: Messrs. A. Cooper, Ogden Bros., W. H. Shackleton, R. Garnett, H. H. Towers, P. Drake and Son, Halliday and Chittenden, W. Richmond (Rodley), W. Crabtree, W. Gledhill, A. Hirst, T. Bentley, Lingard, and H. Simonette. The members' subscription realised £18 15s.; adverts. and breeders' cards, £2 5s. 6d.; bank interest, 5s. 3d., and other items brought up the total received to £28 1s. 7½d. The expenditure included grant to Secretaries (previous year), £1 10s.; Year-books, £3 10s.; cash special, £3 10s.; half loss on Novice Classes, 18s 3d.; trophies, etc., £14; postages, etc., £1 8s. 10½d., and other small items, 10s., leaving a balance in hand of £2 14s. 6d. The balance-sheet was passed with loud applause. The election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows:—President, Mr. J. Hartley (Bingley); secretaries and treasurers, Messrs. S. Grayshon (Heckmondwike) and F. Allan (Cleckheaton); vice-presidents, Messrs. R. Garnett (Windhill) and H. H. Towers (Glusburn); trustees, Messrs. R. Sutcliffe (Windhill), and W. Gledhill (Huddersfield); auditors, Messrs. S. Dean (Bradford), and H. Simonette (Bradford); committee, Messrs. W. Crabtree, A. Cooper, T. Ogden, P. Mason, J. Greaves, H. Martin, F. Hammond, P. Drake, W. T. Hall, F. Armstrong, W. Cowgill, W. Richmond (Rodley), R. Halliday, A. Brown, W. H. Shackleton, E. Johnson, A. Hirst, E. B. Denton, and T. Bentley. The resignation of the retiring secretaries (Messrs. Garnett and Towers), owing to business pressure, was accepted with regret, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to all the retiring officers, on the motion of Mr. Allan, seconded by Mr. Cowgill. The following additional rule was made: "Any member wishing to resign from the Club must notify the Secretaries to the effect, and such resignation will not be accepted unless all dues are paid." It was decided to grant patronage on application to any Society holding an Open First Feather show, providing two Cinnamon-marked Classes are made, and the following specials are offered for competition amongst the Club's members: 2s. 6d. for the best 4th prize bird; 2s. 6d. for the best vhe bird; 2s. 6d. from the Club, 2s. 6d. from the Society holding show, for most points gained by a novice. No member to win this special more than once during the season. Passed that we have Open and Novice Competitions (winter shows), and a special Novice Competition to run through the Yorkshire Union shows, where societies make two novice classes, according to our classification. The latter competition caused considerable discussion. It is formed with a view to catering for the very large numbers of novices who are competing for the Union Novice Medal. This competition to run concurrently. Passed, that we have the same classification as last year, viz.: "Cinnamon Ticked or Variegated Yellow Yorkshire, ditto Buff, ditto Yell. hen, ditto Buff." Passed, that whilst any member may show as many birds as he chooses, only three birds may count points for the various club specials, such birds to be "starred." Passed, that we give cash specials for most points with 4th prize birds. Passed, that we give patronage to 12 shows, four of which to be given to representative shows outside Yorkshire, which shall have preference on allotment. Passed, that Rule 13 does not apply to Crystal Palace show. (This rule is in regard to one judge one show.) A generous offer by Mr. P. Mason (Windhill) of £1 1s. for most points gained by unflighted birds exhibited by the "breeder" was accepted with thanks. It was decided that the details for the various competitions and specials be left over for the committee to arrange. A grant of £2 was made to the retiring secretaries for services rendered. The next Committee meeting will be held on June 11th at 6 p.m. Application for patronage should now be made to the new secretaries, Messrs. Grayshon and Allan, Wormald Street, Flush, Heckmondwike, who will be pleased also to give full information to any intending new members. May we appeal to all members of the Club to use every endeavour to assist these gentlemen as much as possible, and thereby make the coming year even more successful.—GARNETT AND TOWERS (late hon. secretaries).

WIGAN AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Special meeting held at headquarters, Legs of Man Hotel, May 21st, Mr. E. Ball in chair. Date for old show fixed for November 25th and 26th, also report from secretary of the Cage Bird Union, which our secretary had not previously received, and which caused much disappointment. Mr. Nuttall suggested there should be a union for all Lancashire clubs, but this was left over, pending a reply from C.B.U. Messrs. Christy, Monks, and Alston were elected members, and a very interesting meeting was brought to a close by a discussion on breeding cages; it seemed to be a general opinion that breeding cages were fresher and birds bred freer when the cages were left exposed to the elements between the breeding seasons.—W. DYER, Asst. Sec.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Kindly accept my best thanks for the fine drawing of my ticked buff Yorkshire bird which appeared on the front page of last week's CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. C. J. Mullgan (Sligo). I have had a splendid season so far. I have over 40 youngsters—Norwich and Yorkshires—and 40 eggs incubating. I wish CAGE BIRDS all success.

I was greatly surprised on receiving CAGE BIRDS last week to see the picture of my six-point buff Goldie Mule appearing on the front page, also to see that you had done me the honour of producing such a life-like picture of him, writes Mr. F. Collins (Camborne). Also please convey my best thanks to your artist, Mr. Norman. I have taken CAGE BIRDS ever since it came out, and would not be without it for anything.

I received the painting (won in CAGE BIRDS Essay Competition) safely, for which I return my very best thanks. It is a very beautiful and exquisite piece of work, and I must congratulate Mr. Norman on the faultless manner in which he has shown the blending of the parents in the different crosses. How happy I should be to be the possessor of such an ideal team in real life, for then I should soon reach the goal of my ambition—to put down a winning team of hybrids at the "Great Glass House." My hybrids have secured nearly forty prizes at the leading Western shows, but it is my hope and ambition to win at the Crystal Palace with a bird bred by the exhibitor—a hope which was almost realised at the last Palace Show, when my Goldfinch-Redpoll hybrid secured the vhc. card in a strong class of eighteen birds. Again thanking you for the beautiful painting, and wishing CAGE BIRDS all the success it so richly deserves.—E. COLLINS (Barnstaple).

The Attercliffe and Dis. C.B.S. are holding their annual nest feather show in the Friends' Adult Schools, Attercliffe, and not at the vestry hall, as in other years, writes Mr. W. Richinson, the secretary. We have already got a good number of specials promised us, and a member is giving a special, value five shillings, for the member selling most admission tickets.

Ramsden's Pure Peppers are unrivalled for colour, purity, and quality. The pick of the harvest has been secured at enormous expense. No other peppers on the market to compare with Ramsden's. Used last season with the greatest success by hundreds of noted fanciers, judges, etc. If proof of above is needed, refer to Palace Show catalogue. Over 250 awards at the Palace Show to birds moulted solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Use no other, and when you ask for Ramsden's Peppers, see you get them. Don't be put off with inferior peppers, just to put extra profit into a shopkeeper's pocket. Sample of pepper sent on receipt of penny stamp only.—J. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London.—(ADVT.)

Mr. J. R. Meikle, the secretary of the Scottish Metropolitan Open Derby O.A. (51, Lothian Road, Edinburgh), writes appealing to Scotch Fancy and Belgian breeders to support his Association by becoming members, fee 3s. (entitling to ten entries at this show), the time for joining expiring on May 31st next.

The London and Counties O.A. have arranged to hold their meetings in future at the Leysian Hall, City Road, E.C., nearly opposite Old Street Tube Station. Trams pass the door from all parts, and it is easily reached from all the tube stations. The monthly meetings will be held on the third Wednesday in each month. I shall be pleased to forward any information to any who may wish to become members.—W. GILBERT, Hon. Secretary.

The Derby Cage Bird Society has weathered two years of misfortune and debt, writes Mr. Henry Wharam, the assistant secretary, and we now find ourselves with a balance in hand, increased membership, and prospects brightening considerably, so that we are looking forward to better times. We ask all fanciers in the locality to join us and help our hobby to go ahead. I will gladly give all particulars if they will communicate with me at 18, Colyear Street, Derby.

We have been afforded an opportunity of inspecting the King anti-mite perch, an advertisement of which will be found elsewhere in this issue. The claim made for this handy little appliance is that it will speedily clear red mite from any cage, thus greatly adding to the comfort of the birds. It is adaptable for both breeding and drawing-room cages, and any of our readers who are troubled with this very common little pest would do well to give the perch a trial. It is well made and finished, and is obtainable at all seed merchants and bird stores at a figure which puts it within the reach of everybody.

We regret that Mr. H. J. L. Williams, of Hartlepools, has had to undergo an operation to his right arm, and that it may be a long time before the proper use of the arm is restored to him. On that account he has unfortunately had to dispose of some of his birds (which he is advertising in this week's issue). He writes: The doctor has ordered me away; so as soon as I can arrange to get someone to look after my remaining birds, I am going to take the wife and family into the country. It is hard indeed to have to part with the birds, especially after getting such a nice lot together. I have had good luck, having obtained nearly 40 young Canaries, which are all doing well.

It has been arranged that the Clapham and District C.B.A. have their first outing on Sunday, June 5, the rendezvous being Ashstead Woods and district, writes Mr. A. C. Askew, the secretary. The friends are meeting at Balham Station (L.B. and S.C.) at 9 o'clock, return fare about 2s.; also from London Bridge or Waterloo. A hearty welcome will be given to any fanciers or friends who would like to join us. It is desirable that the secretary have all names by May 31, so that an arrangement can be made for the number for cold lunch, etc. This is an important item; most fanciers find a good appetite on these rambles.

"The Transfer of a Choice Collection" is the title of an article in this month's issue of "Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—by Mr. H. Goodchild, dealing with Mr. Millsum's stock of foreign birds, which have been transferred to the aviaries at Everberg, near Belgium. An excellent half-tone illustration (by the author) of Brown's Parrakeet and the Bengal Pitta accompanies these notes, and forms the frontispiece to the issue. Mr. W. T. Page writes on "The Aviaries and Birds at Benham, Valance," and "Foreign Birds"; Mr. A. Sutcliffe on "A Holiday in the West Indies," and Mr. R. Suggitt on "Breeding the Goldfinch." There are besides other interesting articles, notes, reviews, etc.

I was pleased, writes Mr. J. N. Jeffery (Paignton) to read the report in CAGE BIRDS of the ramble by Mr. P. W. Mugford and myself, but regret that I am stated, owing to my little girl using an old memo. form, to be the hon. sec. of the Torbay O.S. I do not hold that position, having resigned same last year through family bereavement, and consequent illness; but I am glad to say I am now in my usual health. Our sec. is Mr. C. Parnell, of Palace House, Paignton; while my son Jack is still the asst. hon. sec.. Mr. P. W. Mugford and myself are on committee only, I having consented to act on same, as the members kindly stated, owing to the state of my health at the time that they were prepared to accept me without expecting me to work. I suppose they knew I cannot help working for the Fancy. Anyhow, it was very kind of them.

Giving £60 in specials to societies using Sandiford's Royal Red, you can't have the cake and halfpenny. I give you Royal Red Feed which costs £20 per ton more than any that comes to England. If my customers would be satisfied with the Red feed some other vendors sell I could give them £100 a year more in specials. These gentlemen used last season from 28lbs. to 56lbs. each, not a few lbs. so as to compete for other specials. I will challenge my Royal Red against any other colour food in the world, and produce birds moulted on same hotter and brighter in colour than any other birds moulted on any other vendor's colour feeds. Used solely by Mr. J. E. Davies, N.P.C. cup winner; J. Sincaton, big Scottish cup winner; J. Pritchard, Welsh cup winner; W. Dormer, big Cinnamon winner; and Messrs. Binns, Shackleton, Cuthbertson, big Yorkshire winners. For hundreds other noted names, see my new list of testimonials received this year. See advert. columns. —(Advt.)

The summer weather being now with us, there is little fear of destructive frosts, and the work of planting out one's garden with bedding plant may be done with all safety. Mr. Harry Barker, F.R.H.S., Rosemount Nurseries, Whittlesford, Cambridge, and Mr. E. A. Bannister, Nurseryman, 5, Grotto Road, Twickenham, whose advertisements will be found in other columns of this issue, can supply fine plants in any quantity. These firms are both well-known, and our readers may place their orders with them with every confidence.

We have received from Mr. J. W. Ramsden (11, Josephine-avenue, Brixton, London, S.W.) samples of his pure tasteless pepper and pure hot Natal pepper. These peppers for colour-feeding cage birds (they are also used with great success by many noted poultry exhibitors) which have been specially selected from the finest crops of the chief growers in the world, are of magnificent colour and quality, and make it self-evident that Ramsden's peppers will during the 1910 season easily maintain their wonderful reputation for turning out exhibition birds with that intense colour and attractive bloom so necessary to the attainment of the highest honours of the show bench. Both are sold with a guarantee of absolute purity under the Food and Drugs Adulteration Act. The colour of the tasteless (or "sweet") sample is astonishing, and it should be in great demand. A sample of either or both can be had, with full directions for use, from Mr. Ramsden by sending him a penny stamp to defray the postage.

OBITUARY.

Mr. C. A. PRENTICE (Hyde).

I am very sorry to inform you of the death of one of our members, Mr. C. A. Prentice, who held the position of treasurer to the society, writes Mr. Fred Barraclough, secretary of the Hyde and District C.B.S. Mr. Prentice was a sterling fancier. I am sure all who knew him will feel deeply grieved, and their sympathies will go, along with ours, to his wife, whom he leaves with one child.

Mr. G. FRANCIS (Lowestoft).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. Frodk. Rackham, hon. sec. Lowestoft and District C.B.S., that I write to inform you of the sad death of Mr. George Francis, of Cleveland Road, Lowestoft, which occurred on May 14, by the capsizing of a sailing boat on the river Waveney. He was a very ardent fancier of the Norwich Plainhead, to which his fine stud of over 50 birds bear full testimony. The Fancy has lost in him one of its most promising members, one who spared neither trouble nor expense in trying to reach the front in the breeding and exhibiting of this variety that he loved so well. He was the principal promoter of the Lowestoft and District C.B.S., and many will remember the fine show of cage birds held by this society (Mr. Francis as secretary) the first year of its formation, over 400 birds being staged—the largest number ever seen at one single show in Lowestoft. To the novice he was always ready to give help and advice in whatever form it was required. His kind and genial disposition made him many friends. The funeral took place on May 21 at the Kirkley Cemetery, and the large concourse of people showed how well liked and respected he was; many members of the society were present at the ceremony. To his sorrowing wife and two little children, also to his parents and relatives, the Lowestoft fanciers wish to extend their heartfelt sympathy, for truly he was one of the best.

Sandiford's "Royal Red Feed" and "Champion Hot Natal Red Feed," samples of which have come to hand from Mr. T. Sandiford, Colour-Food Importer, Preston, Lancs., have a reputation of many years' standing, and inspection of these samples shows that they should more than live up to this during the 1910 season. It would not be easy to imagine anything deeper and richer in colour than this year's "Royal Red," and it looks well able to put that "red-hot," fiery tone into the plumage which is so much sought after by exhibitors. The hot Natal carries also the same remarkable colour properties. A sheaf of recent testimonials from well-known fanciers who have used of these colour-foods, accompanies the samples sent us. Samples (and directions for use) can be had by readers on making application to Mr. Sandiford.

National Green-Marked Y.C.C.

A committee meeting of the National Green Marked Yorkshire C.C., will be held on Saturday, May 28th, 6 p.m., at the Market Tavern, Bradford. Business Important: allocation of patronage, new members, etc.—F. ARMSTRONG, secretary.

British Roller Canary Club.

The following alterations have been made in the judging standard of the British Roller Canary Club, writes Mr. J. W. Norris, hon. sec.: Point value of tours: Water glucke points to 3 increased to 5; points to be deducted, high schockel, to 6; sharp and nasal flutes, to 6; Litt and chop, expulsion.

Northern Yorkshire C.C.

Will secretaries requiring our patronage kindly write me, giving classes and judges? Those wishing to join the club should forward their names as soon as possible, as June 30 is the last date for joining. The first table show will be held on June 8: judge, Mr. Ellwood. I have just heard from Mr. Cowgill, of Bradford, that he will be pleased to come and give us a lecture on preparing Yorkshires for exhibition and staging them. This is a treat in store for us, which I am sure our members will greatly appreciate. The meeting will be held sometime in September.—T. C. CRAWHALL, 121, St. George's Terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1/- for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Norwich Unwell.

Moulder.—You ought to have said whether he was with the hen whilst the young were being reared and also whether he is now breeding again. If the latter is not the case, you should separate him, and cage him alone for a week whilst you treat him properly. During this time, feed on a staple diet of plain canary seed only, and every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape. On the alternate days give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut sprinkled with soft sugar. Give a supply of chickweed daily. Limit the diet strictly to this for a week. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of syrup of rhubarb for two days, and for the next week after this give twenty drops of whisky, six each of glycerine and oxymel of squills, and two of encalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three. See that you have not been keeping the bird in a draughty or overheated fluctuating place. Look up replies about feeding, and see also if you have been going wrong there, as I think this is very likely.

Young Canaries Ailing.

Novice.—You are not treating them quite correctly. Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give separately about half a teaspoonful of summer rape to each, and on the alternate days allow the same quantity of crushed sponge cake, crushed plain biscuit, or bread and milk, sprinkled with a pinch of maw. Do not give these all together, but first one and then another on the days, alternating with the supply of rape, so that each of these items will fall due about once a week. Do not make them very moist or sloppy, either. Add no moisture at all to the two first-named, and drain off all surplus moisture from the bread and milk before giving it. Give a pinch only of hemp twice a week. It is not necessary to crack any of the seeds now. Stop all green food for a week, then you may give a half-ripe plantain stalk daily, and gradually go on to other green food. Stop giving drugs of any kind. If birds are too loose in bowels dissolve a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea in the water for a day or so; but the above diet should correct this without any further help. See that all your seeds and foods are perfectly sound and fresh; keep the vessel scrupulously clean, and the cage floor strewn with clean, gritty sand.

Varied.

Disappointed.—It is quite likely the chief cause is your disturbing the birds too much. You did wrong to think of giving the bird exercise by letting it out of its cage just when you thought it was ready to mate. I cannot quite see what you could done for this bird now. The fright would in many cases be quite enough to put the bird off breeding. All you can do is to wait for Time to cure the shock, and not let the bird renew the acquaintance even at a distance, if avoidable. There is little to find fault with in your feeding, but you might have given the egg food quite three times as often to the hens when preparing them for the first round, and the mixed seed might have contained three times the quantity of inga. Separate them now, and in addition to the staple seed diet, give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every day for a week, and a little chickweed daily. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea daily for three days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel for three or four days. Then, if in good condition, you may try mating them again. Seeds and grit are all very good and clean; the latter, however, would be improved by having a proportion of gritty sand. As it is, it is practically nothing but material for shell making. If the Roller cock is a good singer, he will make a far better tutor for the young than either a Blackcap or Nightingale.

Further Details.

G. Smith.—Your feeding would be better if you give a plainer mixture consisting of three parts canary to one part summer rape in the hoppers as a staple and reserve the more elaborate mixture with egg flake for special occasions, such as giving a teaspoonful about twice a week as a tit-bit. After the young are three days old, begin to give green food daily, or better still fresh twice a day, in very small quantities at first, but increasing it gradually as the young get older. I prefer chickweed, lettuce, groundsel, or even watercress at this season. The only ingredients really necessary for preparing egg food are an egg, or eggs, boiled until quite solid (about fifteen minutes is ample) and stale bread crumbs, or, as a substitute for bread, crushed Osborne or any other good plain biscuit. Remove shell of egg, and press egg through a perforated sieve or chop very finely, put in a basin, add twice the bulk of bread crumbs, or biscuit powder, as the case may be, and blend well together with a fork. Use the yolk of egg only for the first week, after which you may use both yolk and white if you wish. Now the cock is separated, clean sand tray when hen has sat twelve days, put in a good covering of clean sand, and do not clean again until young are about a fortnight old. Beyond supplying the necessary foods and water regularly, make a point of leaving hen and nest severely alone this time. Will reply to your last letter next week.

On Strike.

Hilda.—Am afraid this bird intends to rest on his laurels. It might help to bring him back to his vocal duties to supply him with a mate, or to let him hear another singer for a short time, but on the whole, when they take up these trivial dalliances they generally mean to retire from very active vocal performances. Continue to give the same staple as previously advised. Twice a week give a little bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and on two other days each week a small pinch of a mixture of equal parts inga, black rape, teazle, and gold of pleasure. Give a spray of chickweed daily. Allow it to bathe freely now. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice for two days, and after that give a crystal of sulphate of iron, the size of a split pea, twice the quantity of sulphate of soda and six drops of dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week. You might place a piece of rock salt in the wires for it to peck at for a time. If, as you say, it will sing as long as there is an apple or orange within view, keep an apple or orange within view until he has gradually worked himself up, but be very sparing of these dainties until he is really in full song again. Give green food as a substitute for these things during the summer months.

Dietetics.

H. J. Norman.—You will find details on feeding in several replies almost every week for some time past, and also in the book you have. Limit the diet to seed almost entirely whilst hen is sitting, and give a little soft food, whatever kind you favour, only about once a week. On the evening of the twelfth day of incubation, give a morsel of soft food, and from this time a fresh supply at least twice a day until young leave the parents. Give only very small quantities, about half a teaspoonful to a teaspoonful, each time at first, and gradually increase the quantities from day to day as the young grow and require more food. Aim at giving just as much as the birds quite clear up shortly before next supply is due. As green food, you may use chickweed, groundsel, lettuce, or watercress, and give a fresh supply twice a day after the young are three days old. In buying seeds, get a fair supply of canary, summer rape, and hemp, and smaller quantities of inga, linseed, black rape, maw, gold of pleasure, sesame, teazle, and millet—the last four in quite small quantities. You will then be able to concoct practically any mixture you see advertised. A mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape should form the staple.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Brevities.

Blood Feather (Burnley).—Run a drop of Friar's Balsam about the quill from the end of a small feather once a day for two or three days. Allow the bird to bathe freely, and add enough permanganate of potash crystals to the bathing water to colour it light pink. Examine bird and cage well for the presence of insect pests, and if any are found exterminate them. These pests are not infrequently the indirect cause of these troubles.

A Shock (J.W.L.).—You omit to say whether any injury at all resulted from the cat's attack upon the cage. If not, you can only wait and trust to time to remove the shock. You should also endeavour to keep any cat quite out of sight of the bird until it has recovered its usual spirits. If it appears at all dull, you may give a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for one day, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and one drop of tincture of nux vomica in each ounce of water for three days. It is quite possible that if you hung it beside a smart young hen who was wanting to nest, it would go far towards removing the effect of the shock, and the bird may soon be fit to mate.

Canary Breathes Heavily (Miss Davidson).—It is always best to give full particulars respecting feeding and general treatment. Had you done this I should have been better able to tell what was wrong. Try following: First see he is quite out of reach of draughts; do not hang him in a window, nor in the hot sun, nor near burning lights. Keep in as equable a temperature as possible, but not necessarily a very warm one. For one week feed on a staple of plain canary only. Give half a teaspoonful of summer rape twice during the week, and a little chickweed or lettuce daily. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice every second day. For the next fortnight continue the same staple, but give the rape every second day, and on the alternate days give a half-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and strewn with a pinch of gold of pleasure and inga. In the drinking water during this time give six drops tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week, and the next week twenty drops of whiskey, six of oxymel of squills, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence every second day.

Eggs Not Hatching (C.H.).—I take it the eggs were clear, and had no signs of embryo in them. In that case the fault probably lay with the cock, who would, perhaps, not be in good condition, or, if he appeared to be so, the unfavourable weather doubtless prevented his filling the eggs. You may let the hen go to nest again if she wishes to do so, and the result will probably be different next time on account of the more favourable conditions. To ensure this give the pair a small piece of bread and milk, sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a week, and on the alternate days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts inga, sesame, and gold of pleasure. Give a supply of chickweed or dandelion heads daily, and add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea to the drinking water daily for three days.

Out of Condition (Larkspur).—Are the Canary and Goldfinch both in the same cage? If not, I scarcely see how the latter can bully the Canary to affect him harmfully. In any case, I do not think this could possibly be the cause of the Canary's condition, which is far more likely to be due to a draughty position, or to an extremely fluctuating temperature. Look to these things. In addition to staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of hemp every second day, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts, and ten drops of dandelion juice for three days, and after that six drops of tincture of gentian, and a few crystals of citrate of iron and quinine—about as much as will just cover a threepenny piece—two days in every three for a week, and every second day after for another week. Continue treatment for a fortnight.

A Middlin' Wheezer (Novice).—You will probably do no good with this bird, and it is altogether a most unwise policy to try to breed with such. Still, if you do not mind the risk of establishing a strain of chronic invalids, he will doubtless fill one clutch of eggs all right, but by the time these are reared, it will be too late to start again for a second nest. Before mating him give in additiou to the usual seed diet a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut soaked in milk, drained, and sprinkled with soft sugar, every second day for a week, and on the alternate days a pinch of mixed seed. Give two leaves of dandilion daily. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts for one day, and afterwards six drops each of glycerine, oxymel of squills, and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week. See that he is quite free from draughts and vitiated air.

Crest-bred Hen Not Laying (Novice Crest).—Separate her from the cock for a fortnight, and remove nest and all nesting materials. For the first week feed on a staple of plain Canary only, and give every second day a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed. Give a good spray of chickweed and a whole flowerhead of dandelion broken open daily. In the drinking water give as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence every second day. In the second week continue the same staple, and every second day give a small teaspoonful of egg food, with a pinch of a mixture of equal parts inga, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it. On alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture hemp and millet. Give a free supply of dandelion daily. If available, also give two mealworms daily. In the drinking water in the second week give ten drops of glycerine and five each of tincture of steel and tincture of myrrh every second day. At the end of fortnight mate her again, if ready, to a lusty young cock, and try again.

A Mixture (Redcar).—You should not mix Canary and Mule queries on same sheet, as the latter have to go to a different authority. See Mr. Weston's replies for reply to your third query. 1. This depends solely upon your own taste and desires. The cost of starting with a pair of common Canaries need not be more than a couple of shillings or so above that required to start with a Linnet-muling pair, that is, the difference in price between common Canary and Linnet cocks, which would not be very great. 2. You will find this fully dealt with in the book you have, and in more detail than it is possible to do here. 4. A Yorkshire hen would give you the smartest looking birds, and if mated to a Roller cock would also produce some very fair singers.

Prolapsus (Worried).—This is what troubles your bird, and it required immediate attention to stand a fair chance of cure. Now, after this lapse of time, and with the bird still further injuring itself, inflammation must set in, and I expect all is over by this time. If not, dissolve a small teaspoonful of boracic acid in half a teacupful of warm water, allow it to stand until cold, and well bathe the protruding part with the solution for a minute or two. Then, holding the bird on its back in your left hand, try to gently work back the protrusion within the vent. If you succeed in doing so, insert a scrap of nut-gall ointment about the size of a canary seed. Keep the bowels free for a week or so, and if the protrusion re-appears, repeat the bathing and return it at once, inserting a scrap of the ointment each time you have to do so. After the first time you may use a little cold tea for the bathing. It will not be safe to try to breed with her again this year.

Deformed Claw (J. Clephan).—I think I am right in assuming that the whole toe, and not simply the claw, is involved. If you have not already given the thin perches advised in last reply, do so at once, and take particular notice for a few days whether the bird, when it settles down for a rest, and especially at night, after a short time, gradually works the hind toe over the perch, so that the foot grips perch in something resembling a natural position. If you find it does so, keep the thin perches in for a few months, and the deformity will disappear without further intereference. But if the bird persistently keeps the toe turned underneath when roosting, catch it, and having cut an eighth of an inch off the end of a piece of rubber tubing, as used on feeding bottles, pass the ring then made over the three front toes, which are being held together, and then hold the hind toe back against the leg and pass the ring on upwards until near the end of the toe. Leave it there, and let the bird wear it regularly for a month, when you may remove it, and see if the toe then maintains its proper position. If not, return the ring for a few weeks longer. There will be no necessity to cut off the claw in a case of this kind.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL

By C. A. House. Post free 1/2 (postal order).

A thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the German (or Roller) Canary.

An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style.

There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A Peculiar Case (I. Blythe).—You do not say whether the egg-binding occurred immediately her full time had elapsed. She then commenced moulting, then laid two more eggs, and is now so bare that you wonder if she will have feathers enough to cover the eggs if she wants to sit them. Candidly, I cannot answer your question, not knowing to what extent she is bare; but would point out that the heat for the incubation of the eggs must come from the body, not the feathers. Anyway, it does not matter much either way, as she probably will not want to sit, and if she does, the chances are all against the eggs being fertile. Still, you may try them. You can give the hen nothing at all to force feathers on in such a short time as you require. Your only plan at this season is to wait patiently until the bird moults. Feed her well with a good supply of green food in variety, but do not make her overfat; then she may moult very early, and come out in good feather. Examine the cage well and see if red mites are causing any of the trouble.

The Red Enemy (Dubious).—It is not very likely the birds you purchased introduced the red mites. It is far more likely the nucleus of the attack was already there though unsuspected by you. You must find the principal hiding places. Scrape out all the mites you can and destroy them, and then flush all these places, and any other likely harbours, with a solution of camphor in methylated spirit—one ounce to half pint. Run it into the cracks, etc., off the tip of a camel hair pencil, so that it does not come in contact extensively with the varnish on the surface. If allowed to do so the varnish will be spoilt. Still, if the pest is very troublesome it would pay you to apply it freely without regard to the varnish, which can easily be renewed after a thorough overhaul at the end of the season. Allow the bath freely, and twice a week add a few drops of essence of quassia to it.

Trouble with Young (Bad Luck).—In your first round of nests I imagine you miscalculated the time, and thought the hens had sat a fortnight when in reality they had been doing so a week only. That is the only explanation, I think, of the circumstances. In the second round your feeding was rather faulty. Next time when the young are hatched, give a little yolk of egg twice on the first day only; next day add half the bulk of bread crumbs or powdered biscuit; next day make it equal parts; and on the fourth day two parts bread or biscuit to one part egg, or equal parts crushed sponge cake, egg, and bread. The latter is a good inducement to poor feeders to work better. On the fourth day also give a little chickweed, lettuce, or groundsel, and continue giving a little fresh twice a day thereafter. Also give the egg-food fresh twice a day. Begin giving cracked hemp when young are ten or twelve days old.

Cause of Death (F.D., Macclesfield).—It is too late to speculate on this point now. Only a post-mortem could have revealed it with certainty. If the deaths occurred on the advent of one of those bitter cold snaps recently, I should suspect pneumonia, and begin to look out for draughty spots where that cage is. There is only one other cause I feel inclined to suspect in your case, and that is septic fever. Therefore, I strongly advise you to keep that cage under close observation, and if another bird should die in a similar way, send the remains at once for post-mortem, and so settle the matter. Your feeding seems quite correct. See that all food and water, and also the vessels, are kept scrupulously clean, and make the egg-food fresh at least twice a day.

Two Sick Rollers (C.E.B.).—Seeing the birds have been suffering so long, I can give you extremely little hope of making any material improvement in them. Now you have placed them in a room where the temperature will be more unvarying, see it is well ventilated, but at the same time guard strictly against cold draughts, and do not place the birds too near a window, or in a current of air between door and window. Continue your present staple diet, but give the mixed seed once a week only, and every second day for a fortnight a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it instead of any other soft food. After the fortnight substitute a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and give only twice a week. Give a little chickweed daily. In the drinking water give six drops syrup of rhubarb and a pinch of Epsom salts every second day for a week, and afterwards twenty drops of a mixture of two parts each glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and one part each ipecacuanha wine, and chlorodyne, daily for a week, and every second day for a week or two after. Any chemist will mix you a few pennyworths of the mixture ready for use.

Bare Skin (T.A., Carlisle).—Feed on a diet of plain canary only as a staple. Every second day give a half teaspoonful of summer rape separately, and on the alternate days a scrap of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and then sprinkled with soft sugar. Continue this for a fortnight, then reduce the bread and milk to twice a week, and dust with sulphur only once a week, for a few weeks longer. Give a little green-food daily in variety. Allow the bath freely. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon-juice twice a week, and on two other days give twenty drops of chemical food. Paint the bare places twice a week with a feather dipped in tincture of perchloride of iron, just moistening the skin each time. If it is not better in, say, a month, write again and give some particulars as to how you have been feeding and treating the bird.

Not Singing (C. R. Airs).—The bird ought to have been in song before now if you are sure it is a cock. As you give no idea how you feed and treat I cannot suggest the cause, unless I take it that the clicking noise is significant. See the bird is kept quite free from cold draughts, and impure air, such as the fumes of burning lights in the evenings, and is not over heated. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day for a fortnight give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver emulsion well mixed in it, and on the alternate days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, and gold of pleasure seed. Give a little dandelion or chickweed daily. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon-juice for two days, and afterwards twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of encalyptus oil, well shaken together, every second day for a week.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

An Outdoor Aviary.

H. A. Hamilton.—I am afraid that to give full details of the building, arranging, and managing of an outdoor aviary is a matter quite beyond the scope of these query columns. A book could be written on such a theme; indeed, Cage Birds already publishes a book dealing thoroughly with outdoor aviaries and birdrooms, and I am sure that your best plan would be to consult its pages. You will find it gives photographs and designs of many pretty and easily contrived aviaries, and you will be sure to find one suited, to your needs. The fitting up is also described at length. It is, generally speaking, better to keep seed-eating birds by themselves, especially if the place is but a small one. Bullfinches (in fact, any of the Finch family—this includes the Buntings) will certainly do well in Scotland. Robins are not good aviary birds, being pugnacious and dangerous. Shall be glad to advise you on any particular point concerning the projected place.

Young Starlings.

R. A.—You surely must have overlooked the fact that last week (May 21), in the answer I gave Thomas Shannon, most of the questions you now ask were fully dealt with, i.e., how to hand-rear a Starling, and the best way to feed it. My own nestlings I always keep in a ventilated, but cosy, basket, and throw a piece of flannel over them at night; they require, of course, to be kept warm, and a bed of short pieces of hay is suitable to keep them on. Never let their surroundings get dirty. As the youngsters grow, add now and then a pinch of small but gritty sand to the food. It seems to act as a preventative of looseness of the bowels (or diarrhœa). Young birds want feeding once an hour (do not "stuff" them at any time) at first; every two hours or so at later stages. Cease hand-feeding when they cease to "cry" to be fed, and are picking up food for themselves. No special appliance is necessary for the feeding. I have used a large, blunted (with a pen-knife) match stick with every success; likewise a quill tooth-pick with all sharp corners removed. The handiest implement I ever possessed, however, was a little bone mustard spoon, which I cut to a suitable shape and different sizes at each end (handle and bowl) and smoothed off with very fine glass-paper. Different fanciers have different ideas, though. Put the food well down at the back of the tongue, and always be careful not to bruise or lacerate the tender mouths of the nestlings.

Early Treatment of Softbills.

Nestor.—To obtain a good insight into the treatment of newly-taken small Softbills, I advise you to purchase a copy of Mr. Frostick's "Meating-off and Feeding Softbills" (sold by Cage Birds, post free 6½d.). This is a thoroughly practical and helpful work. Briefly put, live food is the best for all newly-caught small insectivorous birds; it is, in fact, essential to their successful "meating-off." One can manage very well with mealworms only. But more variety is helpful, and live ants' eggs especially, or flies, wasp grub, aphides (or smother fly), smooth caterpillars, and any of the crawling things found on garden plants are excellent, according to season. At first the bird should be put in a quiet corner in a suitable cage (a light cover, if necessary), and have a free supply of mealworms or live ants' eggs; also the other things mentioned, as obtainable. Pin a few mealworms to the perches, at front of cage, and put a supply inside in a shallow earthenware or glass dish. The general feeding should be on the following lines:—As a stock mixture: Powdered Osborne or other suitable biscuit, four parts; best ants' eggs and dried flies, two parts each; ground silkworm pupae one part; meat meal, half part, by measure. I take the quantity required of this and mix it just crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, watercress or chickweed (use young leaves only). It is necessary, of course, to give in addition all the live insect food one can possibly obtain. To the above stock mixture I add, after damping, a teaspoonful or two of preserved egg-flake, or part of a hard-boiled fresh egg, finely minced, and, more occasionally still, a little finely-scraped raw lean mutton or beef. To get the bird on to the stock mixture cut up a number of mealworms, and well rub the pieces into the daily food allowance (after, of course, it has been prepared for use). Gradually lessen the supply of live mealworms. The bird will pick the cut pieces out of the food mixture, and gradually get to eating the latter. Many small softbills (the Blackcap, Garden Warbler, Whitethroat, for instance) also like ripe fruit.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

A Trio.

A.S.T.—(1) Sea sand is much esteemed by fanciers for use with their birds, and I know many who go to considerable trouble and expense to get it. I have never heard that it "causes the feathers to fall off the birds," neither do I credit the statement. (2) Larks do not bathe, but should be sprayed frequently. They delight in a fresh grass turf, which has been well sprinkled with water. (3) Of course, it is possible. Soaked chicken-meal (without grit) is excellent for Thrushes if a little of a good mixture specially designed for insectivorous birds is mixed in with it, and some suitable live foods given, also fruit and berries, according to season. But the best (though not the cheapest) method is to feed the bird on the following lines (any good corn dealer would mix you the stock food). Stock mixture (store it in tins): Finely ground chicken (or game or pheasant or partridge) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupae, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the chicken (or other) meal without grit. If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes (or puppy meal) makes an excellent substitute. Damp quantity required for daily use with grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season, or cold boiled potato. Vary them frequently, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake, or half a hard-boiled egg, finely minced up, occasionally. Give some mealworms daily, and any other live insects you can lay hands on, also ripe fruit and berries, frequently, and according to season. "Black-beetles" are very much relished. Get the "Nutshell" booklet (post free 2½d.), dealing with the Song Thrush and Blackbird.

Feeding Young Mules.

Bermondsey.—Rearing young Canary Mules is certainly no more difficult than the rearing of young Canaries; in fact, I should say that it is easier, for the Mules are generally more precocious and sturdy, that is, grow more quickly, and can look after themselves at an earlier age. All Canary Mules reared by Canary hens are brought up in very much the same way as young Canaries—that is, on similar food and treatment generally. When they are commencing to feed themselves offer (in addition to soft food) maw seed, lightly cracked canary and hemp seeds, groats (or coarse oatmeal) shelled and broken up sunflower seed; also seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's purse and groundsel; and thistles in season. Don't, at the same time, forget grit and cuttlefish, likewise old, crushed mortar. Steep some summer rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a towel before offering it to the birds. This is very good, especially where anyone experiences difficulty in getting green food regularly, for which it is to a certain extent a substitute. All crushed seed should be prepared fresh daily. I should wean them off egg food as soon as possible, substituting for it home-made egg cake, moistened, if necessary, with a spot or two of milk or of water, or a little stale sponge cake, or crushed sweet biscuit (maizena wafer, tea or Osborne), also moistened with milk. Egg cake made and baked at home really does not need damping. Don't make the mistake, when dropping egg, of leaving off soft food entirely. You could turn the Mules into flight cages, but they are apt to be mischievous, and pluck one another, however, when kept in numbers together.

Brevities.

What Canary (A. McK.).—You cannot do better than obtain a nice yellow Border Fancy hen Canary as a mate for your Grey Singing Finch; either variegated or clear. This should be easy, seeing that you live in the "land o' cakes," where Borders are also much appreciated.

Management of the Goldfinch (R.N.S.T.).—I advise you to send to Cage Birds for a copy of the "Nutshell" booklet dealing with the Goldfinch. It is only 2½d. (post free) and gives full and thoroughly reliable and up-to-date information about the caging and feeding, delicacies (wild seed), etc., best suited to this favourite Finch. You will be pleased with your bargain.

Breeding Skylarks in Captivity (J. G., Hyde Park).—Quite a number of people have succeeded in breeding Skylarks in captivity. I refer to aviaries, both large and small; but as regards doing so "inside a breeding cage," as you put it, well, I dunno. There are breeding cages and breeding cages; some which I have seen would hardly hold two Skylarks, much less their nest. I once saw a nestling Skylark at Clapham Snow which I was given to understand, had been bred out in an ordinary back-yard, in a kind of small butcb-shaped cage.

Hen Greenfinch Feeding Young (W. T. Best).—You have no need to worry over the non-availability of a hen Canary; you can with fair certainty rely upon the hen Greenfinch bringing up any Linnet-Greenie hybrids which hatch out of the eggs she is incubating. A hen belonging to an esteemed friend of mine has hatched five Goldfinch-Greenfinch hybrids and reared every one; a bonny lot. You are feeding most excellently, and nothing can be lacking on this score. The seeding green food (shepherd's purse, groundsel, chickweed, dandelion, etc.), should be given very freely.

Two Questions (E. M. M. C.).—(1) Why anyone should have told you that both cock Goldfinch and hen Linnet are "sure to pine and die if left together," and that they will not breed, is beyond my comprehension. Both statements have absolutely no truth in them. At least, I hope so. What I mean by this is that if either should unfortunately depart this life it will not be merely because you had them paired up, and if they do not breed, it will not be because young cannot be produced from a cock Goldie and a hen Linnet. (2) It is a very good sign when birds behave in the manner you describe. Your feeding is excellent.

Selling Young Thrushes (Rather Afraid).—I think you must surely be mistaken in stating that Thrushes are not protected in Suffolk; they may not be during the autumn and winter, but I should feel inclined to wager that they are during the breeding season. Anyway, if the eye of the law discovers you trying to sell young (nestling) Thrushes in London, then I am quite sure trouble will follow, and most likely that "fine" of which you are "rather afraid." Bird-keepers can only break the law at their peril, just the same as other people. Don't do it; and sleep in peace.

A Cinnamon-Coloured Mule (Old Standard).—A cinnamon-coloured Mule is entered in the dark Mule class (that is, of course, if a self-cinnamon, i.e., providing no white or foul feathers appear amongst its plumage). If it is a good big shapely specimen, and a nice tone of colour, most judges would put it somewhere in the prize list, but precisely where depends upon the merits of the bird (of which I cannot judge without seeing it), and the keenness of the competition. Just an ordinary cinnamon Linnet Mule would be worth only a few shillings (as a curiosity); a show specimen one to two sovereigns, or thereabouts.

A Siskin Sheds Feathers (Old Soldier).—The bird has not suddenly commenced to moult. Had this been the case, you would not have found wing feathers strewn about the cage in such quantity, and all in the course of a few hours. To be brief, the bird has met with an unfortunate accident; has "flighted" himself, as fanciers term it, that is, knocked all the flight feathers out of his wing. How this happened I can only surmise. A bad fright will bring it about (especially one at night, when the bird dashes madly around in the dark) or a struggle to free the wing if a bird happens to get it locked between the cage wires. It is an accident which is liable to occur in the best-regulated bird-room. The feathers will be fully grown again in five or six weeks' time. Are you sure the Linnet lost no feathers?

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

A Feather Puller.

"Phœbe."—This annoying habit is very difficult to cure (in some cases it is never entirely given up), and the only thing for you to do is to continue the treatment advised in our previous reply in its entirety. Use the following simple seed mixture: one quart each canary and white millet, and half pint each hemp, oats and sunflower seed, well mix, and keep a supply continually in the cage. Let it have the ripe fruit, also plain biscuit and nuts (shelled walnuts are best). It should have cuttlefish, cotton reels, and a piece of a branch to play with and cut up. Keep the bowels well regulated with Dinneford's Magnesia. I do not know of any specialist who would call and see the bird; I do not think there is any danger of your losing it, so far as I can gather from your details. Persevere with the above for another month, and then report progress, unless there should be further complications.

Young Tiels Plucked by Parents.

F.W.B.—This is the first instance of the kind I have met with. It will not materially affect the young; the adult birds evidently want the nest to themselves for rearing another brood. I should advise you in this case to remove the young as soon as you see them eating heartily of the seed mixture themselves, though I expect the parent birds will feed them till the next brood is hatched; the feathers will soon grow again as soon as the youngsters are left alone, which will be as soon as the full clutch is laid, and they are incubating again, when the young birds will, I expect, be driven from the nest. Unless carried to too great lengths there is not much to worry about; the only other course to take would be to get a roomy box, with a wire front, and hang this up in aviary. The wires should be about one inch apart; put in food and grit. The water tin had better hang on the outside, and with the bottom of box extending in front of the wire, forming a platform, the old birds would feed their progeny through the wires; then as soon as their plumage is renewed, and they are able to look after themselves, you can remove the wire front and give them their liberty again. You might try putting another nest alongside your present one, and put the young birds in that; the old birds should soon find them out. They will not need brooding this kind of weather.

Parrot Picking Out its Feathers.

H.H.—It is the table food (scraps) that is doing the mischief, and you must stop these at once and confine your dietary as under: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts in variety, plain biscuits, green-food, and cuttlefish. A crust of dry toast can also be given; this can be slightly moistened with water if the bird so prefers it. The above give you ample range for a varied diet, and you need not go outside same. If you wish the bird to keep in condition, do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. To allay the irritation, give one or two doses of Dinneford's Magnesia

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

(one part magnesia to three parts of water) at intervals according to the bird's condition; the bowels must move freely, but there should be no appearance of diarrhœa. Foment the swollen foot with hottish water into which has been put a little Condy's Fluid, and after allowing it to dry, paint with whisky. If there are any signs of matter, the foot must be regularly cleansed with the warm water (as above), and as soon as the swelling appears ripe, it must be pricked and the pus got rid of by gentle pressure, and again well cleansed. After all humour is got rid of, a little healing ointment can be applied.

Budgerigars and Finches.

"Lemberg."—(1) As much flowering (seeding) grass as they will eat, together with canary and white millet seed, with a few oats and cuttlefish. A millet spray may be given as a change; also supply cuttlefish and a piece of old mortar rubbish. (2) You do not give me any idea of size, and "large" is a very comparative word, according to the uses of it. Providing you do not overcrowd you could keep Budgerigars, Black-cheeked Lovebirds, Cockatiels, and Rosella Parrakeets together. A general seed mixture of canary and white millet in bulk, and hemp, oats, and sunflower seeds in more limited quantities, with ripe fruit, green-food, grit and cuttlefish would meet the needs of all the above. I am afraid if you attempt to keep Budgerigars, Finches, and Waxbills together, though harmony may reign for a time, it will not be long before you pick up first one and then another of the Finches' and Waxbills' broken wings or legs, and if you keep them together the risk must be your own. (3) Half or three-quarter-inch matching would do, providing you keep a watch on the weather opening up the joints; but the more satisfactory method is two thicknesses of rough planking (half-inch), with a layer of felt between, and the cost is but little more. However, the matching will answer if you cover up all cracks as they appear.

Brevities.

Parrot Nipping Off Its Feathers (J. T. Ives).—This habit has not yet become pronounced with your bird, therefore there is hope of a cure. Spray it twice weekly with quassia solution, and keep its bowels well regulated with an occasional dose of Dinneford's Magnesia (one part magnesia to three parts of water). Its diet should consist of seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, green-food, plain biscuit, or stale crust of household bread. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. There are several replies to other querists which will help you.

Budgerigars (Bird Lover).—There are several other replies re these pleasing birds which will help, and you will find general directions in your book. All birds should be at least a year old before being allowed to breed; under the conditions of captivity some precocious youngsters may attempt to do so, but it would only ruin them, and their progeny would be of poor stamina. Procure a pair of adult birds, and as soon as they have become steady and thoroughly used to you, they will settle down and breed; the length of time before they breed is very variable, it depends on the individualism of respective pairs. Handle them as little as possible; you will mostly get a sharp nip when you do, and the needle point of a Budgie's beak soon draws blood.

Birds for Indoor Aviary (A.W.T.).—Weavers, Combassous, and Whydahs would really need a few live insects during the moult and seasonal change of plumage, and should regularly get a little live food to keep them really fit, and the Weavers and Whydahs would quarrel, I think. I should really advise pairs each of Long-tailed and Rufous-tailed Grassfinches, Magpie Mannikins, and White Java Sparrows. For the sake of its bright colour when in breeding plumage an odd Madagascar Weaver could be kept with the others, and if Hartz travelling cages, with the fitting removed and a bar cut away for entrance, are being about, all of them are very probable breeders. If any young are hatched, a little of some good soft food mixture (see advertisements) should be given daily in addition to the regular diet.

Budgerigars and Finches in a Cage (Pat).—I will not take any responsibility of your keeping Budgerigars and Finches together in a cage; though they are so kept, and for a time all seems to go well, but sooner or later first one and then another of the Finches will be found with broken leg or wing. Java Sparrows and Weavers (cocks only) would be the most likely to hold their own. If you want the Budgerigars to breed, I should advise you to leave them in sole possession of the cage. The hen Black-head has a narrowed and more pointed beak, and is not quite so rich a colour as the male. You must repeat this query to our British Bird expert (Mr. Weston) next week; in the meantime, put a few grains of Epsom salts in the drinking water and supply as much fresh green-food as the bird will eat.

Budgerigars Not Breeding (Railway Engine).—Your information is quite correct; they will soon breed, but from your own details the birds are not yet accustomed to you, but flutter about when you go near them; be as steady as possible when attending to their wants; also avoid anything likely to scare them in their vicinity. They are not likely to breed till they have become fairly steady; they will ultimately settle down and breed. For diet see reply to "Lemberg" in this issue. You would find "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (see advert. in this column) very helpful. Your Canary queries should have been on a separate piece of paper; they have been passed on to our Mr. C. St. John, and answers will appear next week.

What Parrot? (Collier).—It is the Rosebill or Rosella Parrakeet, a hardy Australian species, which is a fairly free breeder in a roomy outdoor aviary. Its value is 20s. to 35s. a pair. It should thrive and do well on a seed mixture of canary, white millet, oats, hemp, and sunflower seeds, half the bulk of the mixture to consist of the two first items; ripe fruit, green-food, cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. However hardy a bird may be, it must not be subjected to draughts. It is a restless, active species, and if kept in a cage it should be a roomy one.

Parrot Pulling Out Its Feathers (Peggie Wilson).—You must tell me how you have been feeding and treating this bird before I can properly answer your query. In the meantime, give it one or two doses of Dinneford's magnesia (see other replies), and do not give any tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. I shall be pleased to advise you further on receipt of the above particulars.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

J. Petford.—Infectious pneumonia is causing the loss of your birds. This disease is of very common occurrence this season, and is generally brought about by the introduction of a diseased bird or birds into one's premises. Several of my recent correspondents have incurred large monetary losses through this same disease, and in each instance it has been traced to this cause. The great mischief is done by allowing the disease to extend too far before advice is sought, the disease not only spreading, but increasing in severity the longer the delay. It appears to attack hens more frequently than cock birds, and to be very sudden in its approach and rapid in its cause. Apparently well one day, they are found to be mopish and dull the next, with symptoms of disturbed breathing, and dying during the course of the day. The lungs in all cases are badly inflammed; in fact, almost black, which seems to mark it off from the ordinary pneumonia occurring in inclement weather, and hæmorrhage, or blood spots occurring on the surface of the coverings of the brain. Recovery sometimes occurs, but not often. Prevention by isolation of sick birds (early carried out) is effectual, but unfortunately the disease is allowed to run its course, and is not investigated until several deaths have occurred and the whole place becomes contaminated.

D. Forrest.—There was no possible form of treatment that would have helped the cock Canary. The disease was of too serious a nature. A blood vessel had given way on the brain, due to increase of blood pressure, owing to the warm weather, and excitement occasioned by its removal from hen. Ultimate handling caused its sudden departure. Both lungs and brain were engorged with blood. Such accidental occurrences are common at beginning of warm weather.

Club Notices (A. S. Treasure).—We have had a supply of cards sent along to you. Many thanks for your appreciative letter.

Photographs (E. Collins).—These came safely to hand, and are in every way admirable.

Recipe for Egg Flake (J. H. Bennett).—We shall be pleased to repeat the recipe if you can give us the title of the article in which it originally appeared, or the name of the author. Otherwise we have no means of tracing it.

Wild Seeds (A Reader).—We already publish an illustrated handbook which deals with all the wild seeds and plants (thistles, shepherd's purse, chickweed, etc.), which are so useful to bird breeders and keepers; price 1s. 2d. post free (vide advertisements). Its title is "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants for Cage Birds." Evidently you have overlooked it. Coloured plates are enormously expensive things to produce "The Comet" (J. H. Jowett).—We read your poem with interest, but dare not send it to our printers. They would most certainly have said: "Don't come-it on us"; and then there might have been bloodshed.

Special Prizes at Cowdenbeath Show.

SIR,—In class No. 111 of the bird section at the last Cowdenbeath Show, I won a 2s. 6d. special, but have never received it. After writing three times to the secretary and receiving no answer, I have made up my mind to communicate with your paper and "show them up," for writing to the secretary seems of no use. Two years ago a party I am very familiar with alleges that he also won a special at the same show and never received it. Such treatment as this does not encourage the patronage of bird fanciers.

ALEXANDER GRAY.

Proposed Specialist Norwich Canary Club in the North.

SIR,—Having been asked by some well-known breeders of the Norwich Canary to try and form a specialist club for same, on similar lines as the other Northern specialist clubs, I will be pleased to hear from fanciers in the Northern Counties, when I will let them know when the first meeting takes place, for the election of officers and the drawing up of the rules to govern same. So, fanciers, please send your names on as soon as possible, and let us have a club worthy of the North. The proposed subscription is 2s. 6d. per year.

Glasgow and District Derby O.A.

An Appeal to Lovers of the Scotch Fancy.

SIR,—As membership of the above Association closes on May 31st for year 1910, I earnestly appeal to the lovers of the "bird of circle" around Glasgow for support. This Association was instituted as far back as the year 1884, and is open to all fanciers within a radius of five miles from Glasgow Exchange. The membership fee is only 3s., which entitles the member to stage eight birds at our show, which falls to be held on Saturday, September 10th. A meeting of the members will be held in the Grand National Hall, Main Street, Gorbals, Glasgow, on Friday, June 3rd, at 8 p.m. Election of judges and other competent business. Committee meet at 7.30 p.m. same evening. I trust that a large attendance will be the outcome of this appeal. Fanciers rally round the confined Derby, and place the bird of circle in its wonted place, viz., on the highest rung of Canarydom.

The Battersea Open C.B.A. Show.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to thank Messrs Honeysett and Easterling for answering my letter. I am quite sure by their replies that both gentlemen will do their best to persuade their society to engage a third judge should the number of entries at the nest show be anywhere near the number of last year. I am afraid I cannot accept Mr. Honeysett's invitation to become a member, as I live too far away to attend the meetings and help in the work, but I will promise him (if my birds permit) that I will send an entry for every class the society gives in my section, and when I go to see them in the afternoon I hope to find the judges finished and the catalogues out in good time, so that I can enjoy the show.

VISITOR.

SIR,—I am very much afraid that sight influence has affected friend Easterling's power of penetration, for judging from his reply to my letter of last week, one cannot help thinking that Mr. E. would have us believe that he can at sight tell by whom a letter is written, and so sure of his man is Mr. E., that in the very first paragraph he attributes my remarks to jealousy. If friend Easterling is desirous of becoming a champion shot I would advise him to take a few lessons to enable him to hit the bull's-eye, for at present he is right off the target, or in other words, Mr. E. is giving some one the credit for doing that of which he is innocent. I am not interested enough in the affairs of the Battersea C.B.A. to be jealous, and I would like to state here that my remarks were not intended to convey the impression that the judges' awards were not satisfactory, and I have no hesitation in saying that not a word reached my ears that the awards were not well received. Don't try to switch me on to the judges, Mr. E. I will be honest and tell you that I was not at the show during the time the British were being judged, and what I wrote about the Goldfinches and Linnets was word for word what I heard pass from the lips of a gentleman who was a total stranger to me; probably he may have been one of the grumblers referred to by Mr. Easterling. With regard to his attack on another society, of which Mr. E. would have your readers believe I'm a member, I can only say it is very unsportsmanlike to jump at such a conclusion when not sure of your ground. It is also bad form to bring in the question of another society's business in order to try and make a mistake of your own management appear infinitesimal. I am truly sorry that a letter of mine should draw a confession of bitterness of feeling towards another society and one of its members. I have no knowledge as to what society, or which member Mr. E. refers to; I am quite satisfied that his reference is not applicable to any society to which I have the honour to belong. That Battersea at their next big show may have an increased entry, with an additional judge to share the work, is the worst wish of

DARK MULE.

On a Ramble.

SIR,—A friend and I had a ramble on May 20. We entrained at Bradford for Shipley, making our way to Shipley Glen and Baildon, to study the ways of the birds. The first nest we found was a Song Thrush's, on the top of a bank; it contained four young about five days old. Then we went up a small gully and found the Pied Wagtail's—four unfertile eggs and one young. Further on a Thrush's nest contained four eggs. Going along towards Baildon, we came across the Snipe's—four eggs, also a Yellowhammer's. Next to take our eye was a Ring Ousel's nest with four young; and they looked a treat. Going along the moor we found two nests of the Twite, with four and five eggs respectively; also another Snipe's—four eggs, hard sat. I nearly trod on this one, and she didn't half "go," I can tell you. I may say that I have read a lot about the Chaffinch copulating while on the wing, but I think it is a great mistake. We watched them pair many a time on the branch of the tree near the nest. I hope this will make the matter clear, and I hope others will give their views.

P. JOWETT.

What is the Object of Prize-giving at Shows?

SIR,—In a lecture delivered by Mr. L. J. Richardson, before the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., on May 3rd, he is reported to have said: "I have been round with a judge who said, 'This is the best bird in the show, but I cannot give it the first prize because the bird wants a tubbing.'" Now, Sir, I should like to know what is the object of prize-giving at shows? Is it to enable exhibitors of birds to show good birds or good specimens of bird-washing? I buy prize birds for breeding purposes to try and produce the best young birds, taking the opinion of the judge as an expert's on the subject; and I daresay other amateurs are influenced in the same way. In the above-mentioned case an amateur would doubtless have bought the 1st prize bird for his bird room thinking he had bought the best bird in the class. My excuse for taking up your valuable space is that I am very interested in breeding good first-class Plainheads for beauty of shape, colour, etc., and I try to get the best stock birds for that purpose.

H. S. SCHOLES.

A Nest that Served a Double Purpose.

SIR,—In your issue of May 14th I note a correspondent draws your readers' attention to the above. A similar incident came under my own observation during the past week, but in this case it is a Thrush that has taken possession of a Blackbird's nest that had been robbed of one egg a few days previously. Such incidents are caused, no doubt, by the birds being disturbed too much or their nests repeatedly robbed. Not only can boys do this, but I have also seen girls take the eggs away. During a ramble on a recent Saturday I came across quite a lot of nests that had all been robbed, including Thrushes, Blackbirds, Green Linnets, etc.; but in spite of all this I heard a number of the Thrushes singing strong, and being anxious to know where their nests could be, I had another look round, and this time observed they had built on the top of the highest and thickest hollies. I could not but admire such wisdom on the part of these birds, as nothing short of a long ladder could reach their nests. A few weeks ago, at this same spot, I laid my cap on top of a fine young Thrush, and in less time than it takes to write this I was surrounded by, I suppose, all the birds in the vicinity, including the parents of the youngster I now held in my hand. There were quite a number of other Thrushes, Blackbirds, Starlings, and Green Linnets, besides very many other birds. They all sat on the trees near me, and the chattering they kept up all the while I held the youngster was really most interesting; but as soon as I let go the youngster all was peace, and I was, as I hope to be for writing this,

ABSOLVED.

The Type of the Lancashire Canary.

SIR,—I notice a letter in CAGE BIRDS from our old friend Mr. Garner. He seems to be at a loss to understand why he and Mr. House should be attacked about the awards they both gave. I think we are justified in making the attack, because the bird in question does not answer to the type of the Lancashire Canary, and therefore ought not to have been in the honours list. Mr. Garner seems to know how the bird has been bred, because he says the bird was bred by a well-known Lancashire breeder and he had no "Crest." He may not have had, but there must have been some "Crest" blood somewhere in his stock, or it would never have come up and shown itself to the extent it has done in the Buff Coppy in question. He says the bird has been on the show bench about four or five years and has won about twelve prizes. He may have done, but that does not say he is a typical Lancashire Canary. In my opinion he ought never to have won a prize in Lancashire competition, because he distinctly shows Crest properties in his head formation. The bird was shown at Middleton last December under one of our most modern judges, Mr. Hardy, of Oldham, and was forthwith immediately disqualified. Why? Because it does not answer to the type of the Lancashire Canary as arranged by the Lancashire Canary Association, and this show being held under the patronage of the L.C.A., also of the Lancashire and Lizard F.A., Mr. Hardy acted up to the instructions from the specialist society and at once disqualified it. Mr. Garner seems to think that rules are nothing to go by. I think, John, that you are going a step too far when you set at defiance the rules of our specialist society.

J. OLDHAM

Proposed New Open Cage Bird Association for Glasgow.

SIR,—A general meeting of the fanciers of Glasgow and district was held on May 17th in the Co-operative Hall, Glasgow, to finally consider the proposals made by the delegates re the above Association being formed. About seventy fanciers were present at the meeting. The Chairman (Mr. R. B. Jarvie) explained the object of the meeting. Mr. J. Roulston eventually moved, and it was seconded by Mr. J. McLeod, "That this meeting decide to form an association to run an open show, annual subscription to be 2s. 6d. each person." An amendment to this was moved by Mr. W. Hutchison and seconded by Mr. H. F. Hutchison "That we do not form such an association," the motion being carried with applause by 36 votes against 5. The election of office-bearers was then gone on with, the following gentlemen being successful for the various positions: President, Mr. R. B. Jarvie; Vice-Presidents, Messrs. W. Hutchison and R. Jeffrey; Secretary, Fred Bowman, 5, Parkview, Tollcross, Glasgow; Assistant Secretary, Mr. R. Heggie; Treasurer, Mr. A. Malcolmson; Committee, Messrs. Godber, D. Graham, R. B. Gibb, R. Thomson, A. Maxwell, J. Henderson, A. Roulstone, T. Drysdale, H. Jamieson, J. Dunlop, A. K. Chalmers, Mitchell, H. Appleyard, C. Martin, Faithweather, T. Forrest, Skinner, S. F. To avoid clashing with any other club's date it was finally decided to hold a show on Friday and Saturday, January 13th and 14th, 1911. The following gentlemen were then appointed to look for the most suitable hall for holding show: Messrs. Graham, Chalmers, Maxwell, and Paling, and to report same at next open meeting. The next meeting of the committee was decided on for May 24th. After the Secretary had been instructed to write the Glasgow and West of Scotland Club, accepting the loan of their staging, the meeting terminated with a hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Fanciers Go A-Visiting.

SIR,—I herewith send you a short account of a visit paid to Messrs. Charlton and Anderson, of North Seaton, by a few of the fanciers of cage birds from the Barrington and Choppington Social Club C.B.S. a few Sundays ago. Mr. Charlton in person conducted the party to the residence of his feathered pets, which one can call an ideal home. Owing to lack of room they have used part of the River Blyth! They have fourteen piles sunk into the bed of the river, and the bird room is built partly on the piles and partly on the quay wall, and they inform me that it frequently happens that the high tides reach within eighteen inches of the floor, rather too close, I should think, to be comfortable. It is built of well-seasoned wood on the outside; in fact, from the remains of two or three old herring fishing boats that were given to them. The room is 70 feet long, 13 feet wide, and 11 feet 6 inches high, and is properly ventilated, and lighted splendidly, also heated with hot water pipes (the water being heated from another room built outside of the bird room). The cages are in racks running along one side of the room, and on my visit they had 24 pairs of Canaries, Yorkshire, Norwich, and Borders, and about 14 pairs of British birds, and I must say, if they have any success from the latter, they will have, as we say in the North, some "funny beggars." After we had spent an hour and a-half amongst the feathers Mr. Anderson came with the welcome news that tea was ready; and such a tea, with real girdle cakes and every dainty possible. Mrs. Anderson being one of those "canny bodies," we were soon at home, and doing ample justice to the good things she had provided. One of the visitors (Judge Dixon, of Bedlington Station) stated he was like the youngsters he had a full crop and could not make a squeak. We gave our thanks to Mrs. Anderson for the kind manner in which she had entertained us. She promised, if we would go again, when the tide was coming in, that she would catch us some fish, as they can always catch a "fry" from the bird room! After spending more time among the birds Messrs. Charlton and Anderson proposed a walk to Newbiggin, by the sea, which is only a short distance from North Seaton, and a splendid hour was spent at this little fishing village. We took train for home after enjoying a splendid day's outing.

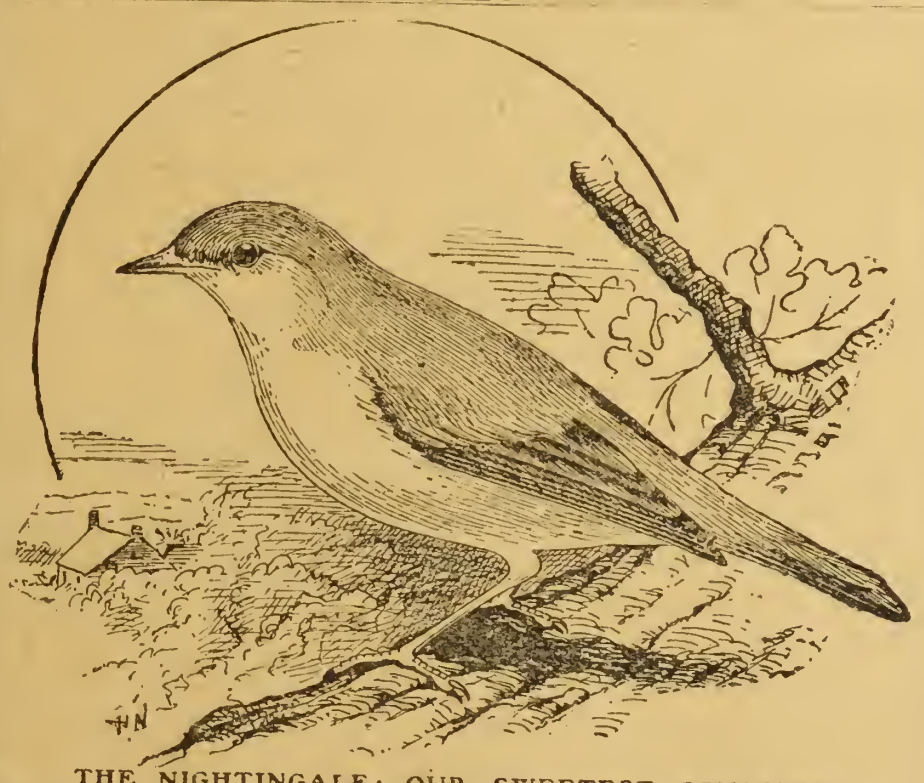
The Future of the Cage Bird Union.



What is it to be?

SIR,—I thank Mr. T. C. Crawhall for the public reference he has made to my character, and while I appreciate to the full extent the effect such utterance may have on the back of recent events, I must tell you that though there is no personal animosity between us, I resent the injury he has been instrumental in bringing on the Union in the No. 1 district, by his conduct; and when I think of the high principles with which he entered the Fancy being undermined by the exhibiting of Canaries, it does not lessen the grievance. He admitted his knowledge of the rule when he entered his birds, but considered it a very slight offence—one that might well be allowed to pass. However, the district delegates thought otherwise, and so did other exhibitors, for at the meeting of Newcastle Society previous to the case being considered, there was considerable noise raised to think that Mr. Crawhall should be summoned on such an offence; and Mr. Maddison told me openly if Mr. Crawhall was allowed to break the rule and not be punished, he would exhibit at every show whether under the Union or not. He would not be the only one to do so. You will see from this that exhibitors were crying for action on the one hand, while others thought the matter too trifling to be noticed. I was in favour of a small fine of seven and sixpence being imposed, or the alternative of two months suspension. The mention of a fine startled some of the delegates, but as that would not have desired effect (Mr. Crawhall would never miss seven and sixpence), and the question would be too easily settled, it was decided to suspend him. He expressed his intention to appeal to the Council, which he ought to have done as a sincere and honest member of the Union. But, not he, he sent his resignation to six societies to seek their support; and got it, and expected the district committee to go down on their knees before them and obediently squash their former decision, and retain their "self-respect"—"eat humble pie"—forsooth! Then, as to being inconsistent. He stated before a company of fanciers, of which I was one, that as far as the Cage Bird Union was concerned he took a neutral position. A few days after, as the secretary of Newcastle Society, he opposed the Union for all he was worth, when the last vote was taken which ended in a majority for leaving; the first majority after many attempts. Now, as to my action. If, in an assembly elected by the people to acknowledge a decision, practically unanimous, after striving manfully to avert it, and then to recommend its acceptance in the interests of fellowship in the Fancy, as well as the members directly concerned in the decision, is to be inconsistent, then where are we to find self-respecting men? But, since justice is a matter of opinion, I don't consider myself debased by stating the case for the opposition and advising acceptance rather than have the whole of the members of the Newcastle Society punished for the false pride and self-conceit of a few. The only writer that I noticed that could be looked on as a "would-be friend" of mine did me no harm whatever by his reference to my bits of fossils and fancy plates, and he helped to revive a chilled regard for exhibitors during a time of forced idleness. His consideration was not thrown away. Sir, I am under the impression that Mr. Reid, of Sunderland, has something rankling in his mind in connection with district 1, and myself as its late representative. If so, it will be well to "have it out," as he either knows a great deal, or, Parrot-like, repeats a lesson. I am wise enough to be aware that I know very little, though I have been in touch with the Fancy for over twenty years, and my actions have ever been prompted by a desire to make things better socially than I have found them during that time. How is it those clever and prolific writers have not taken the place of incompetency in the official ranks of the Union? No, it suits better, is easier, and more popular to stay outside to find fault, to ridicule and condemn the work of better men, though perhaps not so capable at writing letters. I am sure Mr. Reid would have been an important addition to the committee of No. 1 district, and the whole division would have received Mr. Crawhall with open arms as the district representative, and being a member of six societies, he would exercise more influence than a man who is a member of only one. As these repeated hints of "something that is being kept back" cause much doubt in the minds of fanciers, I must request Mr. Crawhall to place all he knows before the readers of your journal, and not to allow his regard for my feelings to place innocent men in the position of being condemned without a hearing, on pure supposition. He is not likely to upset any movement that is on foot to present the representative with a testimonial for his faithful and unremitting services, carried out at great personal sacrifice and inconvenience to make truer and purer what some people consider their hobby! I don't mind my feelings getting ruffled by any one, so long as fanciers are placed in a position to judge between them and me, which can only be done when a case is definitely stated above the name and address of the writer. I bid ye, in the words of Fitz-James who—when he found himself surrounded by the followers of "Black" Rhoderick in the Highland Glen—placed his back against a rock and cried: "Come one, come all! this rock shall fly, From its firm base as soon as I."

G. W. MACPARTLING.

SIR,—Mr. Crawhall says I am mistaken if I think he deserted. What can we call it when a man leaves his comrades, turns round, and fights against them? I never suggested lowering the Cage Bird Union's income. The C.B.U. does not pay delegates' expenses to district meetings; the present low subscription does not allow for everything. I only suggested that the railway fares should be shared by the district, or meetings should be held consecutively at each town. Mr. C. says no society can afford to refuse entries, and that we would be putting the noose round our own necks by refusing entries from non-Union members. I would like to ask, what are we doing by refusing entries from affiliated societies? Who is putting the noose round our necks? Mr. C. says in his first letter that he has given great thought to the reconstruction of the Union on workable lines, but is still in the dark; yet at the last meeting of the Northern British Bird Mule and Foreign Bird Club he was asking someone to stand for secretary of the Northern Federation. No one volunteered. Mr. Brunskill, of Darlington, said he was too busy to be secretary, but he would do all he could to help it, if it was started. Mr C. again brought the matter forward at the committee meeting of the Newcastle C.B.S., and said he would like to save time by writing to Northern Societies at once asking them to meet for the purpose of forming the Federation. We were told it would be built on C.B.U. failures. Now, why not call the meeting to try to reconstruct the C.B.U.? It will amount to the same thing. Societies will send representatives as before to arrange show dates, etc. Do not forget that all suspensions, just, or otherwise, have been meted out by your local men, call it Federation if you like. It is really amusing to hear the opponents of the Union are so willing to help a Federation. Who was the originator of the idea? Was it a sincere wish, or simply a card played for another trick? There will be no coercion—join for love, or not at all; as you like; in fact, the Fancy is so pure round about here that there is no need for a Federation. Fanciers need no rules, or ruling! That is, if we are to believe all we are told. Mr. Crawhall finishes his letter by saying—"Is comment necessary?" Yes. Most necessary, Mr. C., when you will write such things, knowing at the same time you are taking an unfair advantage. The Fancy don't know all about the notice of motion by your own representative to re-open the case, and such things make me think you still decline to bury the hatchet, though you say you are not vindictive for any harm done to you. In reply to "A Delegate," the judge made no error. A steward told him that the young Crest could not compete. Therefore he awarded it to the bird standing second on the bench. Is that fair to the exhibitor? Look at it from his point of view. Here is a special according to schedule and catalogue awarded for the best bird in the section. And the judge said over and over again it was the best bird. It was awarded the Northern Crest Club medal for best in the section, and the win was witnessed by fanciers of the variety from all parts. Mr. Heath brought it out for the bowl and said on behalf of the young Crest: Look here, my young bird is first in its class, and beats all the old ones. You bring a bird out second in its class, beaten by an old one. But for all the decision of the Council was unjust, I have come to the conclusion that we, as loyal members, should hand the special over, and more weight should be placed on the fact that Mr. Taylor has returned it to the Newcastle Society, who have no right to it at all.

THE NIGHTINGALE: OUR SWEETEST SONGSTER.
Drawn from the specimen which won the first prize at Clapham Show for Mr. A. Jackson (Bawtry, Yorks.)

SIR,—Through some unfortunate circumstance, I didn't get last week's CAGE BIRDS till Monday morning, and consequently have not had much time to reply to Mr. Reid in this week's issue. I at first had unkind feelings towards my newsagent, but since reading Mr. Reid's letter I am not sure if I am not just a trifle grateful to him. Coming so soon after the holidays, before one has got into the old way of things, as it were, I don't know if Mr. Reid's long line of arguments hasn't left me with an impaired digestion. As Mr. Crawhall is in some way responsible for this unfortunate contretemps, perhaps he will prescribe for me. However, that has nothing to do with the C.B.U. Mr. Reid lets us have this week a full account of Mr. C.'s "unwitting mistake." If it be true, and I have no reason to believe otherwise, Mr. Crawhall is to be complimented on inventing so good an excuse; I couldn't have done better myself. It appears Mr. C. did everything quite openly. He might have written for the Union's permission to show, but for the fact that he knew perfectly well that he wouldn't have got it; so he took French leave, and was punished for it—Mr. Reid says harshly; I differ from him. But I don't see any use in falling out about it; let us agree to differ. With regard to the paragraph where Mr. Reid says, "that, taking Mr. Johnson's line of argument, those who opposed the Union would be at perfect liberty to break its rules without fear of the consequences," he purposely misunderstands me. Mr. Reid knows quite well what I mean; I will give him that credit. My argument is this: If the Union had let Mr. C. off, or had given him only a light sentence, there would have been a fracas amongst the lesser lights of the Fancy. Not the Newcastle section though. I imagine I can hear a few of their utterances now. "Why! Crawhall's got off!" "Oh, aye! he's one of the big-uns!" "He's well in with the officials!" "Those sort always get off!" These are the sort of expressions we should have heard; and I am not quite sure if Mr. Reid himself would have been quite innocent of them. Perhaps he can see now why I think he wasn't treated harshly. Mr. Reid says that Mr. C. didn't even use a fictitious name, "which is more than some of the correspondents in this discussion can say." This latter sentence struck me all of a heap. I think that must have been what made me feel not quite well. However did Mr. Reid guess that I wasn't writing over my own name? I didn't know that, in addition to his other qualifications, he was gifted with that of second sight. I am sorry Mr. Reid thinks my line of argument in the Birchley affair so one-sided. It is one of my failings; in fact, of Northerners generally. There seems to be only one point between us, that is, which is the principal offender? I maintain that Mr. B. was; Mr. Reid thinks that the perpetrator of the fraud was. Don't let us call it a fraud, nor him a perpetrator. He is an artist (anyone who paints is), only he doesn't quite mix his colours right; and I don't see that it is a fraud to sell a stained bird, unless the seller gives a written guarantee that the bird is in its natural colour, which I am sure not many sellers would be fools enough to do considering to what extend it is practised. I am sure Mr. Reid will admit that to spray a bird with glycerine and water is quite legitimate; yet if we were to add just a tinge of Condy's or Saffron (for sanitary reasons, of course) we become, to quote Mr Reid, the perpetrator of a fraud. To conclude, I would inform Mr. Reid that, because he and I were charitable enough to give Mr. B. the benefit of the doubt, it doesn't follow that the C.B.U. Council were of that opinion. I happen to know there are some fanciers who are so uncharitable as to believe that the seller was not the "perpetrator." Although I can't (it seems) hoodwink Mr. Reid, I might as well still sign myself

A Recipe for a Washable Distemper.

SIR,—I notice in your issue of May 24th Mr. John England states that "Duresco" is the only preparation which can be varnished. There is another distemper on the market named "Walpamur," to which the same statement applies. I have even seen doors and skirting boards done with this stuff and varnished, and this by a high-class firm of painters at a bank. However, both the above-named are somewhat expensive, and, as Mr. England states, the ordinary size distempers are insanitary and are a great bother to wash off the cages, and if they have to be washed off one might as well use ordinary whiting which comes off a great deal easier. I send a recipe for a cheap paint which may be used for cages or walls either inside or out, and is a good rust preventer; it is especially good for damp walls, and may be painted or varnished or tinted and left at that, and for rooms that show the damp through the paper a coat, or better two of this will put them right for good and all: 2½ pints paraffin, 2 pints benzoline, 2lbs. pale resin, and ¼lb. stone best whiting—buy this at a chemists, and not in ready put up packets which are usually rubbish. Melt the resin and pour into the benzoline, and stir in two pints of the paraffin. See that the whiting is dry and finely powdered, and mix in the remaining half-pint of paraffin till thoroughly saturated (no hard lump), then mix all together. It should be kept air-tight to prevent drying too quick. This dries very hard. To colour it, any of the dry powder, as bought at the colour shops should be well mixed in. To prevent wet from soaking into outside walls, the following is very good, and does not discolour the walls: Melt ½lb. tallow and stir into 1 quart of paraffin, and soak well into walls on a dry day. A little Brunswick black added to this will tone new walls to match the colour of old ones. It is perhaps unnecessary to state that the mixing of the above is best performed in the open air.

S. ROBINS.

The Redpoll in New Zealand.

SIR,—Could anyone through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, enlighten a Colonial reader on one or two points concerning the Redpoll? The Redpoll was, I believe, originally brought to New Zealand many years ago from England, but as it keeps to the open country it is not very well known here. It would be surprising if you could see people, when shown one in a cage, ask what it is, and when told, exclaim "I have never seen one before." Although such a quaint and amusing little bird, it has some peculiarities which I would like to know more about. A good specimen for colour has a red breast and red on the top of the head. Well, when caged the red disappears off the breast at the first moult, and leaves the breast a light brown shade—something after the colour of a Goldfinch's breast. The head remains red for another year, and at the second moult it also disappears, and the red head is replaced by a light shade of yellow. Several fanciers here have suggested that the breast was coloured by the bird frequenting plants that have a red flower or a red dye in them; others have said it was through the particular food the bird has been living upon, and when caged it loses these things, and so loses its colour. As no one I have met has any certain knowledge about its losing its colour, I thought some reader might be able to enlighten me on the subject. I do not know if this is a characteristic of the bird, but it is just as I have found them. The food I have fed my Redpolls on, prior to this strange occurrence, is canary seed as the principal, with hemp, maw, millet, and rape seeds on alternate days, and two or three times a week a bunch of groundsel or chickweed for green food. Another interesting point about these little birds—and I do not know the cause of it—is that they are subject to taking fits. The first time I noticed it was about three years ago, when I was cleaning out my aviary one afternoon. When it happened I was stooping down gathering up the waste seed that was scattered on the floor, when all at once I heard a thump on the floor at my back, which made me turn round. I soon discovered it was a Redpoll, but when I went to pick it up it went through a series of antics that at once suggested an acrobatic or a contortionist turn at the theatre. At first, before I went to pick it up, it was leaning well back on its tail, with its head thrown right back as far as it would go, and reminded one of a Ponter or Fantail pigeon trying to hide its head. I was so amazed at its unnatural position that I did not like to pick it up, not knowing what was going to happen, but I thought it could not stay there, so bent down to pick it up, when it rolled on to its back (not over its side, but over its tail) two or three times, and took up other queer positions before finally exhausting itself. When I did pick it up, it lay quite limp in my hand, and I thought it was dead, until I saw a slight movement in the body, which made me at once give it a tonic of sherry and water, which had the effect of bringing it round to life again. I had it in my hand for about ten minutes, when it became quite lively, so I caged it by itself, and covered it well up, not going near it again until next morning, when I had a peep at it without taking the cover off. It then seemed all right, so I uncovered the cage, when it immediately went through the performance again. This went on for three or four days every time I went to the cage. As I knew of nothing I could do to help the poor little sufferer, I put it back into a big flight cage with some other birds, when it speedily seemed to get better. Nothing happened for about three months, when I saw it go through these performances again. This time I did not attempt to touch it, as it seemed to me it was better where it was, and I was not far wrong, for in five minutes it was flying about as lively as ever. The same bird lived for over a year after its first fit. Since then I have had fully eight or nine Redpolls that have had this trouble. In the same flight with the Redpolls there are about a dozen different kinds of small birds, but none of them have ever been taken the way the Redpolls have. Can anyone explain the cause, and say if there is any cure? Another interesting point about Redpolls that I have noticed is that the birds become very tame, and seem to lose the power of flying, about a month or six weeks before they die. To look at a Redpoll when it gets this way, you would not think there was anything wrong with it; they are not puffed up at all, but hop from perch to perch, and will readily come to you when the flight is entered, not showing the least bit of fear. They will even allow a stranger to touch them whilst sitting there. These are interesting points which I cannot account for, and I would be very pleased if a reader could throw any light on these peculiar happenings of the Redpoll.

A Notice to Members of the Yorkshire Union.

SIR,—If the Show which was announced in the column headed "Twitterings," in May 14th issue, to be held at the Great Horton Working Men's Club is going to be run on lines that might involve members of the Yorkshire Union in serious trouble if they participate in it, please allow me to direct the attention of members of the Y.U. to the matter. Apparently, according to the information I have received, the Show is open to the members of this working men's club only, but the said members are to be allowed to borrow birds from whom they wish, in order to compete in the eight classes that are being provided. It is in regard to these alleged conditions that I desire to issue a warning to members of the Yorkshire Union against lending any birds they possess for the above purpose, as I know that some have already been approached in the matter. If members of the Union will just read Rule 17 in the general rules, it distinctly states: "That no member of the Union be allowed to borrow or lend birds for exhibition at any show. Any member so offending shall be liable to such penalty as the Council shall decide." Surely the cases that have been dealt so stringently with by the Council of the Union just recently, which imposed such severe penalties on the parties concerned, ought to be a sufficient warning in themselves to anyone who desires to see the business of the Union carried out in a thorough manner, and I hope that no member will thus far forget himself as to risk the Council inflicting such a penalty for lending birds to compete at this show. Of course, members of the Union who are members of the club as well, are perfectly at liberty to show their own birds if they desire, and if the management of the show had made this stipulation with regard to exhibitors who are likely to compete, then it would not have been necessary for me to have issued this warning against a practice which the Yorkshire Union have fought so strenuously against in order that the Fancy, which we so dearly love, may be purged from anything that may lead up to fraudulent practices. My desire in issuing this warning is not to put any stumbling block in the way of those who are desirous of holding a show, but simply to point out to any management the fallacy of holding a show under such a condition as this (if such a condition be contemplated). Let the prizes that are given be won by the men who have had to struggle hard to breed the birds. This will be helping to cultivate a hobby that has done much good for the working men of this county of ours. In conclusion, let me once again warn members of the Yorkshire Union to beware of borrowing and lending.

To Obviate Seed Litter.

A simple contrivance, to obviate seed litter, which I have used with success. It is made out of a round tobacco tin, in which I cut out six

A Door-space Saving Device.
Sent by Mr. J. Higgin, 11, Leopard Street, Walney, Barrow-in-Furness.

I send you my idea of a hinge for box-breeding cage doors which you can take off when making a flight of the cages or when cleaning and painting them; with the door off the cages go very close together, and the doors are very easily put back again. I have made all mine in this style, and they act splendidly. Take some ordinary cage wire and bend it at end as shown in the illustration; then fix them to the door by means of staples, also as shown. The door (say 4 inches diameter) will then fit in its place, being held in position by two staples as depicted. When you want to take the door off you open it, and then lift it off.—J. HIGGINS.

A Presentation at Larne.

The committee of the Larne and District C.B.A. met on May 19, in Magee's Temperance Restaurant, to bid God speed to their chairman, Mr. S. Magee, who was leaving next morning for America. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. Smith, who, in a few well-chosen words, referred to the qualities of Mr. Magee as a fancier. He then called on the secretary (Mr. W. Geddis) to read the address and make the presentation on behalf of the committee. The secretary, in his remarks, said that by the departure of Mr. Magee, Ireland has lost one of its best fanciers, and the association one of its founders. No one took a keener interest in the Fancy than Sam. He then read the address and presented to him (on behalf of the committee) a handsome cup suitably engraved. Mr. Magee, who seemed much affected, read his reply, and supplemented it by a few remarks, in which he referred to the harmony that existed in the committee, and expressed his regret at being compelled to sever his connection with the association. Songs were sung by Messrs. Gilchrist, Gettenby, and Mann, and short speeches by Messrs. Harte, Crooks, and Owens. The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne." I understand that Mr. Magee handed over to the treasurer the sum of 7s. 6d. as a special for next show, to be competed for by Larne fanciers with birds bred and reared by them in 1910.—WM. GEDDIS, Hon. Sec.

Wild Bird Life.

Wild Birds Among Old Trees.

Summer has advanced rapidly the last few days, the extra warmth and sunshine having effected a marvellous change in the growth of trees, bushes, wayside plants, and grasses. The hedgerows have suddenly become secure hiding places for the many bird homes now under construction, and others containing eggs or young ones. The bird life of a district is mostly regulated by the amount of cover afforded it for the rearing of young in safety, and tho food supply is sure to be greater where the hedgerows and small plantations are more numerous, and old trees are dotted here and there over the meadow lands and parks. These isolated trees harbour more bird life than most people are aware of. Near here we have some grand old walnuts, elms, and oak trees, and a fine avenue of beeches. The walnuts are favourite resorts of the Cuckoo's-mate, or Wryneck, and we can hear his cry daily as he flies from tree to tree in search of food and a secure nesting site. These same trees afford many a cosy place for the slovenly nest of the Starling, and one can generally hear the noisy nestling clammering for food, especially during the early morning and evening hours. In a big hole in one of the elms a pair of Jackdaws have nested for several years. Some Woodpigeons have taken possession of a neighbouring one. Several Blackbirds and Thrushes have built upon the lower branches, and the gay Chaffinches have a felted home somewhere among the higher ones; but it so closely resembles the surroundings that up to the present we have not been able to locate it, although we have watched the old birds daily gathering food in the garden to convey to the nestlings. A good deal of this fare is evidently insect life, as the birds may be seen quite plainly picking up something from the recently turned up soil; but at the same time they do not disdain a handful of plump Canary seed when it is thrown to them.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

*The Brave Robin.

While walking with my brother on a country ramble I came to an old tree and saw a little Robin's nest with two eggs in it. We waited a short time and saw the Robin go in the nest. We went up to the nest, but the Robin would not fly away; it seemed to sit closer on its nest. —Sent by Walter South (age 10), 30, Melbourne Road, East Ham.

Just in Time.

A hut in the garden got on fire, and we all ran to see it, and to our surprise there was a bird's nest on a ledge with four young ones in it. Father got the nest off just in time to save the young birds' lives. Then he threw water on the burning hut and put the fire out. He placed the nest in the hedge close by, and the birds seemed to like their new place. The old birds fed them as we were watching them. —Sent by Atty Mason (age 10), Victoria Street, Withington, Manchester.

*Good-bye, Little Birdie.

Goodbye, little birdie,
Fly to the sky,
Singing and singing
A merry goodbye.

Tell all the birdies,
Flying above,
Nell in the garden
Sends them her love.

Tell how I found you
Hurt in a tree;
Then, when they're wounded,
They'll come right to me.

I'd like to come with you,
If I could fly;
It must be so beautiful,
Up in the sky.

"Thank God We Can Still Have Lark Pies!"

Brutal Result of the Sensational Test Case Under the Wild Birds' Protection Act.

Adverse Decision. Appeal Dismissed with Costs. FRESHLY CAUGHT Birds from Unprotected Areas cannot be retailed or be taken to Protected Districts outside those areas.

The eagerly awaited result of the law action which has such important bearings upon the British Bird Fancy is now known, and readers will learn with astonishment and regret, we feel sure, that the decision has gone against the Fancy.

To recapitulate the main facts of the case: The Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, it will be remembered, last autumn took out summonses against two London bird-dealers, Messrs. Preston and Flowers, for having in their possession Larks and Chaffinches, the said birds being protected all the year round by the County of London Act relating to wild birds. The fact that the said birds were legally taken in an open county during the open season was not contested by the Society, who held that the birds could not be taken into any protected area and exposed for sale. The case came before Mr. Biron (the Old Street magistrate), and his decision upheld the R.S.P.C.A. contention.

Realising the seriousness and wide-reaching effect of this new reading of the Act (that newly-taken British birds could not be offered for sale in any protected district), we placed the facts before our readers, which resulted in a sum of money being subscribed to enable Messrs. Preston and Flowers to have (in the interests of the British Bird Fancy) the magistrate's decision tested in the High Courts of Justice. As the legal point involved was the same in both cases, the case of Mr. Flowers alone was taken to appeal (this procedure also, of course, reducing the expense), and the matter, after several delays, came before the Divisional Court, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice of England, Mr. Justice Channell, and Mr. Justice Coleridge, on Wednesday afternoon last, May 25. These legal luminaries indulged in some caustic comments concerning the anomalies presented by the Wild Birds' Protection Acts, Mr. Justice Channell going so far as to say that without the help of his brother, the Lord Chief Justice, he would have been unable to get any meaning out of them which would have enabled him to arrive at any decision; but in the end after protracted discussion amongst themselves, the members of the Court decided that the magistrates' view of the Act was correct, consequently the appeal was dismissed, with costs.

A Startling Effect.

The effect of this decision from the public point of view is pretty startling. It means, if it means anything, that when Larks are caught in Cambridgeshire they may be slaughtered there with impunity, and may be sent up to London in thousands dead for eating purposes; but if a single Lark is sent up to London alive with the object of cheering up some dweller in a dismal alley, or bringing the soul of the country into the slums, the vendor of that Lark, or the man who has it in his possession, unless he can prove that the Lark was not "recently taken" (whatever that may mean), can be prosecuted with the utmost rigour, and no doubt will be. All that the R.S.P.C.A. have thus gained by their action in this case is to put A PREMIUM UPON THE INDISCRIMINATE AND WHOLESALE KILLING OF LARKS AND OTHER BIRDS, an object which we respectfully submit is entirely contrary to the principles upon which their society was founded, and for which they receive public subscriptions. We do not say that in taking this case up they had that intention in their minds, we simply point out that that is the effect of the decision and the result of their action. For ourselves, we know very little of law, and long ago came to the opinion that the less we had to do with it the happier we should be and the less out of pocket we should find ourselves; but we flatter ourselves that we do know something of common sense, and if this decision is not entirely contrary to the first principles of logic, we have never met any decision that so nearly approached the idiotic.

The original intention of the legislature is perfectly clear. They have given local authorities power to protect their local areas. As the counsel who represented the bird Fancy pointed out, a mere train journey converts a lawful act into an unlawful one. It was perfectly legal to take these birds in Cambridgeshire, but when such birds were brought to London, the exposing of them for sale, or having them in one's possession in London, immediately became illegal. To use the Lord Chief Justice's own word, this is an "ANOMALY" of the most ludicrous kind.

The strictures passed by Mr. Justice Channell on the chaotic and confused state of this branch of the law must be cordially indorsed. His lordship remarked that he found himself quite unable to come to any decision on the point by himself, and that he relied in this decision on the superior brain of his brother the Lord Chief Justice.

What we must work for.

There thus remains only one object for bird-keepers to work for, and that is the amendment of this particular branch of legislation dealing with the Wild Birds' Protection Act. With that object in view, we have decided to immediately draw up and print a petition praying for the amendment of this particular law relating to the protection of wild birds, and we shall be glad to distribute copies of these petitions for signature all over the country. We require as many agents as possible who will undertake the collection of signatures from all sympathisers, and we hope that the secretary of every society in the country will apply for a petition and induce all his members to sign same. We are now engaged in endeavouring to enlist the sympathies of several influential members of Parliament, and personally we shall leave no stone unturned to secure amendment and alteration of this particular Act. We have the Judge's own comments upon the Act to support us, and to justify us in our claim for a revision of its terms, and we only need the strong and whole-hearted co-operation of every one of our readers to bring about the desired result.

This is a matter that affects, and affects gravely, every bird-keeper in the United Kingdom. It is nothing else but THE THIN END OF THE WEDGE FOR THE TOTAL ABOLITION OF KEEPING BIRDS IN CAGES. It must be remembered that in the United States, they have made it illegal to keep any native domesticated bird in a cage, and that it is not lawful to catch or have in one's possession any native wild bird, and this seems to be the legislative tendency all over the world. It remains for the bird-keepers of England to organise themselves properly and to establish the principle that bird-keeping is not the barbarous pursuit these faddists and cranks would have the public believe it is, but a humane and dignified hobby followed by men of conscience and backbone. Unless the bird Fancy can show a firm front to the attacks of these pseudo-humanitarians, who simply defeat by their bigoted zeal their own aims, then we may look for a return to an era of savagery, when the only object of a bird will be its slaughter for eating purposes. How wicked it is to keep a Lark alone merrily singing in a cage, but, thank God, we can still have our Lark pie!

How the Bird Trade is affected.

The effect of the decision upon the bird trade is this:

In a protected area no recently-taken British bird can legally be offered for sale at any shop, or by any person whatsoever, and no person can legally have such bird in his possession.

Thus the situation now turns upon the legal interpretation of the term "recently-taken"; and this is a knotty point. The only case we can trace which has any bearing upon it is one in which Mr. Castang was summoned respecting some Ravens, and the legal view then was that birds which had been in captivity three weeks and over did not necessarily come into the category of "recently taken birds." Therefore it would seem that any person residing in a protected area who desires to keep, or to offer for sale, any species of birds (even though the said birds were caught in the open season in an open district) must be able to say that these birds were caught a month (or thereabouts) before they came into his possession, and, if summoned, must be in a position to produce the party who caught the said birds to depose to the exact date of their capture.

To put it another way: a dealer (or any other person) living in London, or any other district wherein birds are protected all the year round, can only have in his possession, or expose for sale, British birds which he can prove were caught in an open district and during the lawful open season at least a month (or thereabouts) before they came into his possession.

That, at any rate, is the position of affairs to-day, as it presents itself to our view.

On leaving the court we overhead one barrister say to another, "Thank God we can still have Lark pies."

It is a curious fact, and not a little saddening, that under this interpretation of the law Larks and Linnets, Goldfinches and Chaffinches, and the various other beautiful feathered creatures which delight those of us who indulge in the legitimate hobby of keeping British birds, can be slaughtered with impunity and brought into protected areas dead—when the life-breath has been beaten out of their little bodies.

In the very brief space of time at our disposal between the hearing of the case and the necessity of sending this issue of CAGE BIRDS to press, we have not been able to deal with all the various aspects of the matter that present themselves to us, but in our next number we shall hope to deal with any such further points likely to interest British bird-keepers.

The following report of the case has been supplied to us by the "London News Agency," and as the arguments of the counsel engaged concerned only legal points, the effect of one Act upon another, and so on, it will doubtless on this account seem more or less involved and unintelligible to the lay mind.

In the King's Bench Division on Wednesday, the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Channell, and Mr. Justice Coleridge, sitting as a Divisional Court, heard an appeal by John Flower, a dealer in birds, of 88, Sclater Street, Shoreditch, E., against a conviction under the Wild Birds' Protection Act. The complaint was preferred by Charles Watts, an inspector of the R.S.P.C.A., and set forth that on November 12th, 1909, Flower had in his possession at Sclater-street, thirty-six Larks which had been recently taken.

MR. COTES PREEDY appeared for the appellant, and Mr. BEVAN for the respondent.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE asked Mr. Preedy what point he was going to raise.

MR. PREEDY: That the words "killing and taking" in the London Order made by the Home Secretary under the powers given him by Section 8 of the same Act, do not include all the offences in Section 3 of the Act of 1881. He proceeded to read the case submitted by the magistrate, which was as follows: "At the hearing of the said information it was proved or admitted that at 8.35 p.m., on Thursday, November 11th, 1909, a case containing 36 Larks and Linnets arrived at Liverpool Street Station from Barnwell Junction, Cambridgeshire, consigned to the appellant; that the appellant admitted to Watts the following day he had sold some Larks, while the others were in a cage in his window, and that the Larks had been freshly caught in Cambridgeshire; that in the opinion of the Inspector and the person who accompanied him the birds were freshly caught; that the Wild Birds' Protection (administrative County of London) Order, 1909, made by the Home Secretary in July, 1909, in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by the Wild Birds' Protection Acts, 1880 to 1908, and upon application by the County Council of the administrative County of London, prohibited during the period between August 31st in any year, and February 1st following, the killing or taking of certain species of wild birds, including Larks and Linnets; that the Wild Birds' Protection (County of Cambridge) Order, 1907, made by the Home Secretary in May, 1907, in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by the Wild Birds' Protection Acts, 1880 to 1904, and upon application by the County Council of the administrative County of Cambridge, prohibited the killing or taking of certain species of wild birds which did not include Linnets or Larks. These facts being proved or admitted, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that, inasmuch as the birds were caught and taken in an area where the taking of such birds was lawful, no offence had been committed by the appellant against the provisions of the Wild Birds' Protection (administrative County of London) Order, 1909, which did not apply to birds lawfully taken outside the administrative County of London, and my attention was drawn to 44 and 45 Vic., chap. 51. It was contended for the prosecution that the order referred to made it an offence for a person in London to have in his possession any wild bird recently taken, notwithstanding the fact that the taking of the bird was lawful in itself in the district where it was caught, and that the provisions of 44 and 45 Vic., chap. 51, did not apply to the possession of live birds. And, therefore, I, the undersigned Stipendiary magistrate, being of opinion that the latter contention was right, did adjudicate and determine that the said John Flower had committed the said offence."

Continuing, Mr. Preedy said that Section 3 created a number of offences which he would divide into three groups. There was, first, killing; second, taking; and, third, exposing or offering for sale, or having in control or possession. They did not come within the dates of that section, and if any offence had been committed, it must come within the London Order. That Order was framed under the powers conferred by Section 8 of the same Act, and the point he wished to make was that that only covered the first two groups of offences under Section 3.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE: Then you say that illegal selling in the County of London is still limited to these days, namely, March 1st to August 1st?

MR. PREEDY: I submit it is perfectly lawful except where excluded by the Act.

MR. BEVAN contended that the Order was properly framed in the terms of Section 8 of the Act. Section 8 gave power not only to extend the time, but to vary the time, and, of course, in varying the time it would be open to the Secretary of State to contract the time, and substitute three months for six. If Section 8 did not refer to all offences in Section 3, they would have the extraordinary position that while it would be no offence to shoot a bird during three months of the six, it would at the same time be an offence to be in possession of the bird.

MR. JUSTICE CHANNELL: There is a rather more absurd case. If you shot a bird and I picked it up, I am liable, you are not? (Laughter.)

MR. BEVAN said Mr. Justice Channell's illustration at once showed how absurd it would be to read the meaning into the Act that his learned friend referred to.

MR. JUSTICE COLERIDGE pointed out that there would be no offence in having possession of birds if they were dead.

MR. BEVAN said it might seem strange why the Legislature had drawn a distinction, but possibly some of the birds were used for the purposes of food.

At this point Mr. Justice Channell leant over and made some comment in an undertone, which brought a broad smile to the face of the Lord Chief Justice, and he immediately remarked: "We shall still be able to have our lark pie, Mr. Preedy" at which there was considerable laughter in court.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, in delivering judgment, said that the question raised in this case was to his mind one of considerable difficulty. The summons was for being in the County of London knowingly and wilfully in possession of 36 Larks, the same having been recently taken. The Larks had been caught in a county where they might lawfully be caught, and the question really was whether it was an offence to keep recently-caught Larks in London, or whether they must be released when they came to London. Section 3 of the Act of 1880 made it an offence for a person between March 1st and August 1st to wilfully shoot or try to shoot, snare or try to snare, expose, or offer for sale. As regards having in control or possession from March 1st to August 1st any wild bird recently killed or taken, Section 8 provided that one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State might by Order extend or vary the time during which the taking of wild birds might be carried on, and that the penalties imposed by the Act should apply also to offences committed during the time specified in such Order. Mr. Preedy contended that there was no power in the County of London Act except in respect of the "killing and taking" of wild birds. The words "killing and taking" did not appear at all in Section 3 of the Wild Birds' Protection Act. It would seem somewhat strange that a variation of the time for killing and taking should make it impossible to convict for exposing or offering for sale or having in control or possession birds recently taken during some portion of that time. Dealing with Section 3 compendiously, Section 8 did intend to say, and it was provided that, if the time for killing and taking had been extended and varied, the offences under section 3 should also be offences in the altered time. Or, in other words, it was not meant that there should be no power to alter the time for any of the offences other than killing and taking, but that the extension of the time of killing and taking should also extend the time during which the other penalties imposed by the Act for other offences in respect of such wild birds could be enforced. That being so, they then had Larks included in the section by virtue of Section 2 of the Act of 1881, and they had the time extended by virtue of the Order in Council, which, so far as Larks in London were concerned, protected them alive during the whole period of the year. It was suggested that the alteration of the proviso in Section 3 of the Act of 1880. (the altered words in sub-paragraphs 1 and 2 in Section 1 of the Act of 1881) created a difficulty, because "taking" was not there referred to. It seemed quite possible that the Act was intended to extend the right and power of possessing dead Larks, provided one was able to prove that they were killed at a lawful time and place, but not to extend the power of possessing live Larks, so that it protected live Larks further. It seemed to him, therefore, that taking together the Act of 1880 and the schedule of the Order in Council of July 7th, 1909, it was an offence at any time of the year to have in the County of London live Larks recently caught. The other point suggested by Mr. Preedy was that these Larks were lawfully caught because they came from Cambridgeshire, and the Order there did not prohibit the catching of Larks. It seemed to him that larks legally caught in Cambridgeshire could not be sent in alive to the County of London. This was an anomalous state of things but it might be the Legislative thought they ought to be killed and then they could be sent up. For these reasons he thought the decision of the magistrate was right.

MR. JUSTICE CHANNELL: I have great difficulty in interpreting this legislation. I think the amendments that have been introduced make an Act that was extremely difficult to understand when it was first drawn almost impossible to understand. My lord has succeeded in bringing an intelligible meaning out of the words, and I do not differ from it. I am glad he has been able to do it, for I do not know whether I should have been able to do it myself. (Laughter.)

MR. JUSTICE COLERIDGE concurred.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

An Expert's Talk about the Goldfinch.

An Interesting and instructive paper read by Mr. R. BROWNING (Lydford), before the Western Counties O.S. (Plymouth) on May 17th.

Mr. Chairman and fellow-fanciers: In answering Mr. Pope's request for something connected with our hobby, to be read to the members of the Western Counties O.S., I think I said: "I hope to tell you something about our native British bird, the Goldfinch." After I had sent this reply, I began to think how much easier it was to promise than to fulfil. So much has been written and said about the bird, and this by so many of our greatest Finch fanciers, that I feel it is hardly possible to carry out this promise. However, we will try, and if my experience with the bird is the cause of others understanding him a little better, and treating him nearer the natural way than is done at present, it will not be time quite wasted or thrown away.

A Favourite with Many.

There is hardly a fancier of our feathered tribe, no matter what particular species he takes a special liking to, but what at some time or other gets a Goldie or two; and as we get to known our bird better and understand him a little more, it is not to be wondered at that he is such a favourite with so many fanciers.

Ever sprightly he is, and elegant, a good songster, adopting himself to almost any surroundings, interesting in his every movement, in the aviary, large flight, or breeding cage, where he can fly, perch, cling, etc., in so many natural or semi-natural positions, or in one of those small hop cages or prisons, where he, poor fellow, can only just manage to spread his short tail and swagger his defiance and "sir-whiddies" when another Master Goldie is held in close proximity.

I would like here to say a word for our bird by way of protest against his being kept in those miserable little hop cages, in which he is so often imprisoned. I would like it to become law that every bird that is caged should have no less than a foot square of cage space. Not even our smaller birds, such as the Redpoll, etc., should be allowed to be kept in a cage smaller than a foot square. The Goldfinch should never be caught earlier than October's end.

To see Goldie in his natural life is to see him at his best, and to do this you cannot do better than find out where a pair, or two or three pairs, are nesting, locate the spot, and hide in whatever you can; get into a room where you can see them through the window, or hide in some thick thorns, holly, or whatever commands a view of their nesting place, and then watch! You must not mind a few scratches. Half-an-hour's study of the bird should lead you to love him ever after. I have thus watched the species a good many times. Although I have seen some in my time that with good attention and the pepper pot, and some nice dark green enamel on their show cages, etc., have looked nice indeed, they do not compare with the Goldie in his natural haunts, with a holly bush for a background, in the springtime, when he sings his love song, and when to him, no doubt, as to us, the sun shines brightest, the leaves seem the greenest, and everything seems fairest.

From conversation with many keepers of Goldfinches, I find all, or nearly all, are agreed that he is by no means an easy bird to keep in health and bloom. Some have said he is more difficult even than some of our delicate Softbills are.

Goldie at Home.

Now, let us follow our bird from the nest and see how he comes along in his natural state, or as near as we can follow him, and let us see if it is any wonder he does not do well on the fare we want him to. Let us contrast the natural with the unnatural, and see if any of the Softbills would do better if we treated them accordingly.

Not far from some cottage or other inhabited house a nest of young Goldies take wing, likely enough into a meadow where the grass is growing for hay. Here are not only scores of different sorts of grass, but weeds, with seeds ripening in all stages from green soft pulpiness to those which have the brown of ripeness, and the seed consequently harder. Here the old birds are busy from dawn to well into the gloaming—eating, partly digesting, and regurgitating a pulpy, creamy substance into their young's crops every few minutes throughout the day; and they thrive apace and soon get a sample of most of those ripening weed and grass seeds for themselves, and so gradually come to do for themselves, as there is abundance of natural food, plenty of flying room, and fresh air.

Now, along comes a catcher and traps one or two, perhaps the whole brood. How do they do now? They are caged up, hemp and Canary seeds are placed with them, and water, too, may be had. But what can our Greypate do with these? He cannot crack the hemp or any hard dry seed, even if he is wise enough to know that it is food at all; and some (many hundreds yearly) never seem to feed at all, and so "go over" before the first 24 hours of their captivity is past. Others drag along a miserable existence for a time. Few, very few, come on to be of any use or pleasure to themselves or to anybody who possesses them; and we cannot wonder at it. We might as well expect an infant to thrive on beef pudding and mustard, as a five or six weeks' old Goldfinch to live on hard, dry Canary and hemp seeds.

Follow our brood now a bit further. So far all is well. The meadow grass is cut and carried, but there is a great variety of wild seeds in our hedgerows, and in the pasture fields too; ripening grasses contain a good supply for our Goldies, and all around corn fields by the hedges there is sure to be a lot of good things for them, as well as the root crops; in fact, anywhere and everywhere that weeds have a chance to grow, there you find Goldies in broods, and later on in flocks of various sizes or numbers.

Feeding chiefly on wild seeds and weeds, and not forgetting the insect life which invariably accompanies weeds, young Goldies have such a variety of food that they need not yet trouble about anything very hard to crack or digest. They come on to the harder seeds such as hardheads, buttonwort, batchelors' buttons, etc., as they (the birds) come to adult size and strength.

As Winter Approaches.

As winter approaches, causing a scarcity of the softer foods, and when winter proper covers the ground with his icy hand, Master Goldie takes to the woods and trees, and any neglected hedgerow or spare corner where anything like docks, nettles, tall grasses, and many of our winter berries are still yet uncovered by snow or battered to the ground by wind and rain. The trees, too, such as elms, ash, sycamore, and firs of various sorts, seem to be able to afford Goldies a living, for they seem to be living in such places for quite a time.

Gradually Goldie gets used to such seeds as hardheads and thistles (many sorts of the latter); batchelors' buttons, too, are a bit hard to crack if dry. You see, by the seeds of sow-thistle, shepherds-purse, chickweed, perhaps a bit of groundsel, and other soft stuff, Goldie gradually fits himself for harder fare, and about the beginning of August he will follow up those seeds I have just mentioned; and at times he will take a dip at the Scotch thistle and hardheads, then later is driven on to still harder stuff. And be it ever so sharp a time, even when snows are thick about us, Goldie manages somehow to find an existence, and hardly ever starves, as he may do in a cage with plenty of hemp and Canary seed before him.

I do not claim to be against catching our Goldies altogether, for I hardly think I should care to be without them; but I do think we should never buy or catch them until they have moulted out in their natural state, or at least are partly moulted. Then we should be well into October, and the birds would be better able to stand the sudden change of food and environment.

Goldie at the Shows.

There are various ways of procuring our Goldfinch for show. Some of our noted exhibitors, I know, buy the article all ready to go out and win. Others catch their birds. Others buy a quantity of the best they can get during the autumn and winter and moult them. Whatever is most convenient, you will adopt, no doubt. I have tried them all, and the most pleasurable to me is to get them in October or November, put them into as large quarters as possible—a spare room or part of one, or as large a flight cage as I can. In any case, don't cramp them into too small a cage with the idea of taming them quicker thereby, for I don't think you will do it that way; at least, I cannot. Put them into a roomy place along with an old stager or two, and feed on a mixture of Canary, hemp, inga, teazle, and small cracked sunflower; and if you can get some winnowings from the farmer's threshing machine, so much the better. Add to this all the wild seeds you can get at, only don't rely too much on any particular seed to give your Goldie a winning colour, for I have found variety is the thing—and the seeds that are in season.

Medicines for Cage Birds: Their Application and Doses.

By GEO. YATES, M.R.C.V.S.

BENZOIN.—From Benzoin (a balsamic resin) is prepared the Tincture Benzoin Co., or Friar's Balsam, also a very popular remedy. It is safe, pleasant, and may be continued over a long period. It is not only adapted to acute disease, but chronic affections also. It affords relief from asthma, colds, bronchitis, pneumonia, and parasitic infestation of the windpipe and bronchi. Perhaps its greatest utility is in chronic and recurring respiratory disease, rather than in the early acute stage. It is prepared from Storax, Balsam, and Tolu Aloes, and Alcohol. Ten drops in two ounces drinking water, freshly mixed twice daily, can be repeatedly given. For chronic bronchitis, when the bronchial products are abundant, thick and possibly foul, and the mucous membrane chronically inflamed and weak, it is particularly adapted.

As a local application for ulcerations, sore parts in connection with the skin, and to prevent feather plucking due to parasites, it is at once antiseptic and disinfectant, allaying pruritis, or itching. For this purpose take one part of Benzoin to one hundred parts of lard; or better in proportion, fifteen grains to every ounce of lard. This is intended only, of course, for localised application, and, like all ointments, must not be applied over too great a surface at once, as greasy applications too extensively applied interfere with respiration of the skin, producing a condition known as Apnœa.

GLYCERINE: Glycerine obtained by the interaction of alkalies, or of superheated steam with fats, a clear, odourless, syrupy, sweet fluid, provides us with several really useful preparations, viz.:—

Glycerine of Phenol (or Carbolic Acid); Glycerine of Tannic Acid; and Glycerine of Boracic Acid, employed as local applications in the larger birds by means of a fine camel-hair brush for ulcerations and inflamed condition of mouth and throat, occurring in some of the specific diseases, as roup, etc.

Glycerine itself is gently laxative, and imparts a sweet agreeable taste to the bitter tonics in conjunction with which it may be employed. It possesses no especial action except as a laxative, and a demulcent in affections of the throat as laryngitis, catarrh, either primary or associated with specific disease, such as septic fever, etc.

A Useful Tonic.

GENTIAN ROOT: Gentian root provides us with an infusion and a tincture possessing the action of other bitter tonics. It is perhaps the most extensively used and most popular of all bitters, because it is agreeable, being very slightly aromatic. Its bitterness is not intense, and its astringency is but slight. And it is more stimulant to the bowels, and more disinfectant than some bitters. The infusion is prepared by taking:

Dried orange peel, 1 part.
Fresh lemon peel, 2 parts.
Boiling water, 2 parts, and Gentian root, 1 part.

and the tincture:

Gentian root, 10 parts.
Bitter orange peel, 3¾ parts.
Cardamon seeds, 1¼ parts.
Alcohol, 45 per cent. to 100 parts.

To assist birds during the moult, to improve condition, and raise the general tone, in preparation for show, and for combating the results of debilitating disease, both the tincture and infusion are worthy of attention. Both may be given in doses of ten drops to two ounces of drinking water, repeated fresh twice daily for a week; they can be again repeated after an interval of a few days, if necessary.

INFUSION AND SYRUP OF RHUBARB: The former is prepared from one part of the root in twenty parts of boiling water, and given in doses of from 20 to 30 drops in the drinking water; and the syrup is made with one part of root, two parts of coriander, twenty-four of sugar, eight of alcohol, and water twenty-four. Dose, ten drops in the drinking water. They stimulate the movements of the intestines and liver, and so act as purgatives. They may be repeated until this effect is obtained. Smaller doses have an opposite action, causing constipation due to the contained tannic acid.

A Warning.

SYRUP OF SQUILLS is perhaps the most convenient form of administering squills to birds; similarly oxymel of squills, which disguises its bitter glucoside scillain by the added sugar, or honey, of each, respectively. Syrup of squills is prepared from twenty parts of acetum scillæ and refined sugar thirty-eight parts.

Oxymel of squills is prepared from squills five parts, acetic acid five parts, water sixteen, and clarified honey about 54 parts.

Either preparation may be given in doses of ten drops twice daily in the drinking water. It invigorates the action of the heart. It must not be given continuously, but with intermissions; otherwise it becomes irritant to the proventriculus and kidneys. Its remote action is that of an expectorant, and it resemble Ipecacuanha, acting on the bronchial membrane during its excretion, and so promoting discharge and phlegm. It must not be given to feeble subjects or to birds that are in an advanced stage of disease, but in the commencement of catarrhal affection such as common colds and bronchitis.

COD LIVER OIL (extracted from the fresh liver of the cod) I see often recommended. If a bird can be made to partake of it by admixture with bread sop it will be found an exceedingly useful recnperating agent in wasting disease, such as tuberculosis, chronic forms of septic fever, chronic bronchitis, etc. Passing into the tissues, it is a nutritive of the first importance, whilst the traces of iodine, bromine phosphates, and other salts doubtless produce a slight specific action when the oil is given continuously; the latter effects, however, are quite secondary to those of the oil proper, that is to its effects as a food. It has an advantage over other oils in respect to the ease with which it is digested and absorbed. In convalescence from acute illness it is of great service. In every instance where cod-liver oil is indicated, the first point to be determined is whether it can be taken and digested. In addition to the unpleasant odour and taste, other conditions contra-indicate its use, particularly where diarrhœa and considerable fever participates.

This completes the list of medicines available for the treatment of the small cage birds, and it represents but a small portion of those in general use for other purposes; e.g., other and more potent drugs may be given to the domesticated fowl, duck, etc., without danger, but great care is needed in selecting those for the smaller species.

The reader will now be in a position to interpret the meaning of what is known as rational treatment and empirical treatment. It is said to be rational when it arises from our knowledge of medical science, based on natural laws which are known and understood. Empirical treatment, however, is founded on experience only, and obeys no law yet known; frequently it is as successful as rational treatment, but whether successful or unsuccessful no reason for it can be averred. Experience has shown that a particular form of treatment was beneficial in a former case, and therefore it is expected to be beneficial again. When the reasons for these effects are properly understood they will be transferred from the empirical to the national group. Therapeutics will become a perfect science when empiricism has thus without exception given way to rationalism.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Some Seasonable Topics Considered.

By F. J. WEAVER (Wolverhampton).

We come now to the question of the lining. You see this bowl already lined ready to fix in your cage; now what could be better, or what could look better? It is lined with swansdown bought by the yard. Some say it is going to cost a fancier some hard cash if he is to get everything of this description for his use. Now, what expense is there in this? I buy one yard of lining and make 28 covers out of it for a paltry 8d.

At this point Mr. Weaver showed us the size of the cover he uses for his bowl, and how to cut them so as to cause the least possible waste. When you have got them cut, he said, fold them up like this into four (the lecturer folded the covers over once and then again). Cut the outside corners off about ½in., leaving eight v-shaped cuts, so as to enable it to be stuck into the bowl without being creased up.

This is the way I fix the lining into the bowl:— I get a pennyworth of rye flour and mix with cold water; it will stick like glue. You can get it from any well-known paper-hangers, as it is what they generally use for the pasting of very strong wall paper; or you can get it from your baker's—a pennyworth would last you all the season.

Now as to the material; get the ordinary cow-hair and moss, and see that the birds have sufficient. You should see some of my nests now they are finished; they are a picture—nice and round, and firm too, and there is no fear of my getting the eggs tucked underneath and spoilt.

Coming now to another topic, that of soft-shelled eggs, I strongly condemn the sawdust-bottom with the tin of grit for the birds to peck at when at liberty to do so. Get your tray well covered with grit, especially at this time of the season, as it is most essential for the purpose of forming shell for the eggs. There are plenty of well-prepared grits now on the markets, with other ingredients mixed that are necessary for the birds' health in the way of tonics. Another way is to get the ordinary (fowl) egg-shells, well bake them in the oven (do not burn them, but bake them sufficiently so that they will easily grind up), and you will find a skin. After you have broken them up, take that away and then mix with the ordinary red sand; add crushed cuttlefish-bone. This makes a good preparation.

Touching on the irregular laying of some hens, do not let that worry you to any great extent, for it is caused by the cold weather generally, and so long as the birds are healthy, keep them quiet and comfortable, which is the main point. Do not let too many visitors come and see your birds at this time of the season. I do not, and I do not trouble them myself any more than I can help.

I have not been troubled much with either soft-shelled eggs or irregular laying. I have only had one case of soft-shelled eggs in my whole experience, and not many cases of delay in laying, except through the cold weather.

Another cause for the delay in the laying of eggs is that the hens are over-fat. I recommend getting very vigorous cocks for these lazy things; they are lazy, no doubt, and that is what makes some of them so fat. If a cock is very strong and vigorous he will race her around the cage a few times, and that will soon fetch the fat down.

Egg Binding and Its Cure.

A very important topic is egg binding. I recommend the old-fashioned steam cure. Place a piece of muslin over a jug of boiling water and hold the bird towards the steam for a few minutes; then put her back into the nest and place a warm flannel over her.

Another method is to put two drops of olive oil in beak and vent; that is a cure in itself; it eases the poor creature. I know of a case where the whole of the brood of eggs were laid in the afternoon, and with good results, and that was through egg binding. What does it matter when the eggs are laid, so long as they bring forth the desired result? But, of course, we all begin to feel anxious when the hen seems broody. We look forward for the egg the first thing in the morning, and if it is delayed we naturally try to find out the cause.

Incubation and Treatment.

My method of treatment during incubation is not to drop the stimulating food altogether and put the birds straight on to the prison diet again. It is quite essential that they should have some nourishing foods for the strain they undergo by the continual sitting. I give them egg-food of good quality about three times a week during incubation, with a few titbits of seeds. I adopt a method of covering over the cage front with a piece of card-board just in front of the nest-box or bowl, especially in the case of nervous hens; if you don't it is often the cause of the eggs being shattered and broken.

Now some ask, what is the best treatment when the eggs are about to hatch? Some fanciers recommend the baths for the hen and others prefer to take the eggs out and wet them well on the night before they are due to hatch. I don't recommend either method, not as regards the first round, at any rate, as there is sufficient moisture in the atmosphere for what is wanted. In the case of the later rounds I give the birds baths in the usual way. We have a big difficulty before the novice in this respect, and that is that some hens lay eggs that have very tough skins, which causes the chick a great deal of difficulty to free itself. You must be guided by circumstances. Do not tamper with the eggs any more than is necessary unless you see that the chick is poking its beak out and cannot get any further; to tamper with them often-times causes many cripples.

Feeding the Young.

As for the foods for chicks after incubation, I prepare the yolk of egg only for the first few days, but I do not know if that is the best method. I have always had good results that way. Then I gradually tone it down as they get on with good plain Canary seed as a staple diet. When you give them hemp do not crush it as some are in the habit of doing; there is a certain amount of poisonous matter in the shell, and you cannot help getting it into the nut if you crush the two together. Soaked rape is another good seed, but see that it is well dried before using it.

After the chicks are about seven days old prepare your egg-food and put a little maw seed into it, as it is a very good seed when you see the chicks are going on first-rate. I do not use it before as it is very hard compared with the egg-food and is not so easily digested; often-times, too, it causes the throats of the young to be very sore, and you may wonder what is the cause of your youngsters not thriving so well as they might do.

Now comes a big point: which is the best time to start feeding operations? I will tell you how I go about it. I make a practice of feeding my birds five times a day. First of all I prepare two eggs a day. I give the birds the first feed as soon after six o'clock at night as I can about two days before incubation, and I make sure I get it good and fresh. If you follow my method you will not be far wrong. Next I go into the room just before I go to bed and remove the tops of the food and fill the vessels again with fresh; that will last them till the next turn—when you rise in the morning, about 6 or 7, not later if it can be avoided. Another plan I adopt is to have a slate and pencil in my room and jot down notes of what is to be done during the morning while you are at business; of course, I presume you have some one to look after them while you are away. Number your cages so that your notes may read "Cage No. so-and-so: drop green-food"; "Cage No. so-and-so: take egg-food away"; and "at 10 o'clock supply all cages with fresh egg-food and at dinner-time supply more fresh food." That is if you do not put down notes to alter the usual run of arrangements, and you go on in a like manner all the season through. Work regularly with feeding when at all possible. If you see the young are not getting on as they might do, change them from cage to cage if circumstances will allow. I have done it with good results with young in which there is a difference of two or three days in age—no more, as they would be too large for some youngsters, and that would "back" them again. Of course, that method would only apply when you have bad feeding hens.

Another thing I recommend for those hens that do not feed as they might do is to take the cocks away and see if that will entice them to feed. It often-times makes them get from the nest when they have no mate to wait on them. It keeps them from being so idle and also prevents sweating.

Nesting Diarrhœa.

Nesting diarrhœa is invariably caused through stale food, bad greenstuff and unfavourable weather. It is often-times the first-round results that are marred by birds not getting good green-food. When you have this difficulty it is not easy for you to save the hens, and when they are getting into condition again you often-times get bad eggs from their next round; and sometimes it spoils them for the rest of the breeding season.

For preventing mortality amongst the young after they leave the parents I recommend you to keep on with the egg-food as long as possible. Let them gradually wean themselves off the soft-food and let them get on to hard food by themselves. Do not on any account force them to it, or you will soon know the result. Give them a little soft-food right up to the time of the moult, as it will encourage them. When you are feeding them for colour use rape seed, as mentioned before, soaked well and allowed to become thoroughly dry after they are swelled; they are then much easier to crack. Do not allow them to drink too much water; you can prevent them from so doing by putting three drops of tincture of gentian in their drinking water twice daily. Do not get them on to milk sop diet unless it is absolutely necessary.

Now this, gentlemen, is very important: in time of trouble members of societies should support the officials and lighten their duties by attending meetings. What is better than to have a discussion of the different views of members? With regard to the "close season," as some members term it, some go so far to say: "Oh, it is the time of our close season; I need not bother to attend meetings, our officials can attend to all the business that is necessary at present." But we should have no "close season." There is something to be done all the year round.

I have a point now that I can raise with our sister societies in this district. I would like to see something done to make kindred societies—Birmingham, Wolverhampton and West Bromwich—more prominent. Let them do something in the way of supporting one another, as from what I can see it is our only chance of success, for we have to rely mainly on our district clubs for support at the shows. Another road to success is by amalgamation at the shows, a matter which I mentioned to your late secretary two years ago.

My last subject—and a very important one, too—has reference to the Cage Bird Union crisis. I think a great deal of good can be got from it. We should support it and do our utmost to put it into a more satisfactory state. Your secretary and Mr. J. H. de Maillet (secretary of the Birmingham C.B.S.) and myself attended the delegates' meeting in Leicester of District No. 7 a few weeks ago, and we were quite convinced that some good is to be got from it, if we only do our best to support it in the proper manner. It is essential we should have a Union of some description, and it is our duty to see that the C.B.U. is put on a sound basis.

At this point Mr. Weaver thanked all for their attention. A few questions were asked. One was by Mr. Groves: What is your remedy for nesting diarrhœa?—I put a little salts into the drinking water, and prepared chalk; see that it is well mixed, as it settles very quickly; and serve three or four times a day. I also recommend Parrish's chemical food, a plentiful supply of maw seed, and plenty of cuttlefish-bone. Be very careful with the salts, as it is very binding after being used. Mr. Groves also made a few remarks as regards the C.B.U., and Mr. de Maillet suitably replied, stating that it was a resolution passed at our delegates' meeting of District No. 7 at Leicester that caused the executive council to meet and thrash out one or two matters that were passed at the annual meeting held at the Palace. Mr. Jones spoke in reference to nesting diarrhœa, and said he thought it was the fancier's own fault. I condemn, he said, the use of yolk of egg only, as it is far too rich for the youngsters' organs; and that is the cause of most of the nesting diarrhœa, together with the use of stale foods and bad green stuffs. The richer the egg the more bread I put with it. I rear a good proportion of young by that method of feeding. Mr. Andrews questioned the lecturer as regards the main seeds to be used. Mr. Weaver said plain Canary as the staple diet, and a little whole hemp; not much rape, a pinch of inga seed occasionally, and a fair supply of maw seed, but not in the egg-food until the young were about seven days old. A very hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Weaver for his lecture, the best many of our members had ever heard, and some of them are not young fanciers either. Mr. Weaver suitably replied.—JENNINGS AND VILES, general secretaries.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insistedupon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

COLOUR FEEDS.

READ THESE and don't be gulled by anyone. This new Royal Red has cost me 2d. per lb. more than ever before, and the quality is guaranteed far above any that has ever come into England. The following gentlemen had the Hottest birds in England:—

NORWICH PLAINHEAD CUP WINNER, 1909-10.
MR. J. E. DAVIES, STOCKPORT, writes, April, 1910.—"My birds last season were the Hottest living. This helped me greatly to win Scores of First Prizes, Cups, Medals, etc., including the N.P.C. Challenge Cup in all the keenest competition. They made other birds which had been moulted on other Colour Feeds look like Natural Coloured Ones. I used nothing only your Royal Red, and I shall require another lot when your new arrives.

JAS. PRICHARD, BIG WELSH CHALLENGE CUP WINNER.
21, WOODLAND TERRACE, MOUNTAIN ASH, SOUTH WALES, 14TH APRIL, 1910.
"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—You will be most pleased to here that I have won the Welsh Norwich Challenge Cup for the best Three Birds at all Shows held under the Welsh Cage Bird Club, also Rose Bowl for best nuflighted at Club Show, and Sandiford's Cup for Hottest team of Three Birds at all Club Shows through Wales. All these were fed on your Royal Red Feed, and shall send you the order this time again as there is nothing like it for Colour. Truly you are the Colour King."

MR. J. SMEATON, BIG SCOTCH CUP WINNER.
8, BELLFIELD AVENUE, MUSSELBURGH, MAY 2ND, 1910.
"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—All my birds have been fed on your colour feed, have won President's Prize Scottish Plainhead Club; Edinburgh Norwich Cup; Bruce Landsay Cup; Cup for best colour, Preston. Fed the winner of the E.N.P.C. Gold Medal, Pendelton and Salford. I am expecting to have my usual supply again this season as your colour feed is certainly the best."

MR. BINNS, BLACKPOOL, CRYSTAL PALACE YORKSHIRE WINNER.
May 28th, 1910,—"Send me 28lbs. Royal Red, your Colour Feed did well for me last season."

MR. DORMER, GREATEST CINNAMON WINNER IN THE WORLD.
7, SPRING ST., RISHTON, NR. BLACKBURN, MAY, 1910.
"Dear Sir,—Please book me 100 lbs. of your Royal Red Feed, for I find it the best and cheapest feed that I have ever used and gives the best results. I am not giving you a list of my winnings as they have been reported through the fancy papers so often until they are threadbare, and I am being constantly asked what feed I use, and the answer is Sandiford's Royal Red. I won specials at Accrington, Blackburn, Liverpool, Nottingham, Leicester, Sunderland, Hanley, Gateshead, Newcastle, London, Bristol, South Shields, Wallsend, Manchester, Morpeth, Edinburgh, and Crystal Palace."

W. N. MIDGLEY, BIG PALACE WINNER, 1910.
CHESHAM HOUSE, WINSLOW, BUCKS, 28TH APRIL, 1910.
"Dear Sir,—For two seasons past I have used your Royal Red for colour feeding my Norwich. My birds on each occasion have come through a good colour, and, as you are aware, I have had a fair measure of success on the Show Bench which cannot be obtained unless a satisfactory colour is combined with the other qualities that go to make winners."

ALFRED CREY, MORPETH. APRIL 20TH, 1910.
"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in stating that in my opinion, your colour feed is undoubtedly the best on the market. I did even better with it last year than any previous year, for I had the pleasure of winning one of your medals for the Hottest Fed Bird at Alwich Show; I also won over 60 first and second prizes during last show season, and all my birds were fed on your Royal Red Feed."

MR. BAKER, COWES, ANOTHER PALACE WINNER, writes—
"Once more I have the pleasure of congratulating you on the success of your Colour Feed. At every Show when I exhibited I was always well in the money. My noted Clear Yellow, that I fed entirely on your Food, won the Cup and Medal for the hottest fed bird. I think it speaks volumes for the quality of your noted Red Feed. I was very successful at the following Shows:—Plymouth, Dulwich and Peckham, Camberwell Baths, L.R.C.A. Portsmouth, Newport, Bournemouth. Send 1 cwt. of your new Feed as soon as it arrives."

MR. J. C. BARNES, BIG JUDGE. SHEFFIELD, MAY, 1910.
"Dear Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy, I desire to advise those whose ambition it is to obtain that necessary depth and brilliancy of colour for the Show Bench, to give your Royal Red Feed a trial. For a good number of years I have used no other. The results I have obtained are so widely known throughout the Fancy that it is really absolutely unnecessary to give further details as to the wonderful power your colouring agent has upon one's stock." Winner of numerous Silver Cups, Medals, and so forth, including for colour alone 4 Cups and several Medals at various All England Shows. I can conscientiously speak most highly of the production you place before the Fancy at so low a cost to provide quite ample colour for present day requirements. A better feed I know not. My birds, year after year, have always come out ablaze in colour.

MR. SPILLMAN, DEVONPORT, NORWICH SPECIALIST and Founder of the Strain that has brought such fame to the West of England, writes—
"All my winners this season were moulted on Royal Red with a little of your Natal added, and the verdict has been whenever shown—"Always in the Money."

*A Tame Sparrow.

One day I found a Sparrow which had fallen from its nest. I caught it, fed it, and let it go again. After this it used to come in my window every day for food. One day it came in with a broken leg, so I put it in a cage, and in a fortnight it was quite well. I let it out in the garden, and now it comes in every day for food and sleeps in its cage at night. It is turning quite white in colour, and is very strangely marked for a Sparrow.—Sent by Phœbe Philcox (age 11), Pre Fleuri, Horsell, Woking, Surrey.

Ferocious Starlings.

A pair of Starlings have built their nest in a hole in the roof of our house. One day while they were away a strange Starling happened to pass by, and seeing the hole thought what a nice place it would be for him to build his nest in. So he went in to investigate it. Then the two owners arrived upon the scene, and seeing a stranger in their nesting site, became very furious. One of them dashed in at him. Then followed a great deal of squeaking and squalling, and out came the stranger with every feather pulled out of his tail, and some out of his wings.—Sent by J. F. Huckvale (age 14), 35, Rother Street, Stratford-on-Avon.

*Perhaps.

I watched two Sparrows in the plot
Of ground before my flat
First build their nest, then raise their brood
Of fledgings brown and fat.

Now pretty soon these fledgings spread
Their wings, and off they flew;
And straightway the parent birds
Began to build anew.

"The foolish things to move!" I cried.
"They ought to be content!"
"Perhaps, my dear," my wife replied,
"The landlord raised the rent."

The Starling has now come to be regarded as the farmer's enemy, says the "Freeman's Journal," for it has completely changed its character of a seed-eating bird. Formerly it lived on insects and worms, and by destroying these pests was the farmer's best friend. Its only depredation was an occasional peck at fruit. The visit of a flight of Starlings to a newly-sown field is now ominous of disaster. They eat up as much of the seed as they can carry away, and examination of their crops and gizzards shows the extent of their destructiveness.

I have some grand Norwich Canaries, writes Mr. J. Burrows, of California, U.S.A., bred from stock imported from Mr. W. A. Gibbins, President of the Leicester Hand-in-Hand Society. I also am trying a few crosses with Californian Linnet and Goldfinches and Norwich hens. If I succeed I suppose it will be the first time such Mules have been bred. The Linnets here are red-headed and red-breasted all the year round, and the Goldfinches are black and gold. I have at present a nest of each variety; the hens have just commenced to sit.

Will all members kindly attend meeting on June 6th?

I was surprised on opening my CAGE BIRDS last week, to see a drawing of my Nightingale. I must congratulate your artist, Mr. Norman, on producing such a fine delineation. I may say that though exhibited many times our 'Gale has never been beaten by another of the same species. He is in fine form, and we hope to again exhibit him in the coming season.—A. JACKSON (Bawtry).

On Monday next (June 6th), Mr. R. L. Crisp has promised to attend our meeting, if health permits, to speak on breeding Yorkshires, writes Mr. H. Smith, hon. secretary of the Wimbledon and Dis. C.B.S. I feel sure fanciers in this district will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing this well-known authority on the Yorkshire variety. It is hoped there will be a record attendance.

I have sold two pairs of Scotch Fancy Canaries to a fancier in South Africa, through a mutual friend, Mr. A. Fearon, who has been home for a long holiday on account of his health, and who returned last week, taking these birds along with him, writes Mr. J. Ellwood (Cockermouth). I hope they will land safely, and give their new owner every satisfaction. The birds are my own breeding, and one of them is a winner of numerous prizes.

We have been fortunate, writes Mr. C. Lugton, the secretary of the Galashiels O.S., in securing the services of the following gentlemen to act as judges at our annual show on Nov. 19: Messrs. J. Watson (Glasgow), W. Muirhead (Bonnybridge), H. Bennet (Kelso), J. Pringle (Selkirk), J. Stevenson (Beith), T. Brown (Duns), R. Sharp (Newtongrange), and A. Currie (Galashiels). This being the fiftieth annual show held by the "Braw Lads o' Gala Water," the committee are making every effort to ensure an unparalleled success. The above shows that the cream of the Fancy have been chosen to award the tickets. I hope all true fanciers will rally round this old fixture, and make it once more "the Palace Show of the Borders."

The fifth annual report and balance-sheet of the Wimbledon and District C.B.S. disclose a very healthy state of affairs, upon which the sec., Mr. H. Smith, and his fellow officials are to be heartily congratulated. The Pair, Young and Annual Shows all resulted in balances to the society's credit, and the general account shows a balance in hand (£12 16s. 1d.), which is £7 11s. 5d. better than the amount brought forward from the previous year. This is a distinctly good result, which, taken in conjunction with the fact (as stated in the report), that the past year was the most successful yet experienced by the society—there being a net gain of 18 names to the roll—should give the members every confidence in its officers, and intending members every encouragement to join the society.

If you want the best colour food, and there is only one best, you must get Ramsden's. The only colour food advertised with a full guarantee under the Food and Drugs Adulteration Act. Used last season with the greatest success by hundreds of noted fanciers, judges, etc. If proof of above is needed, refer to Palace Show catalogue. Over 250 awards at the Palace Show to birds moulted solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Use no other, and when you ask for Ramsden's Peppers, see you get them. Don't be put off with inferior peppers, just to put extra profit into a shopkeeper's pocket. Sample of pepper sent on receipt of penny stamp only.—J. The weekly journal entitled "Boxing" is by far the brightest and breeziest sporting journal of its kind before the public. As its title conveys, it is devoted to "the manly art," and stands on the highest pinnacle of public favour, while it is the only paper in the world solely devoted to boxing. Last week's special issue—price 2d.—gave its readers 32 pages of interesting articles, photographs, and other items connected with the sport, together with a free photographic supplement of our own lightweight champion, Freddie Welsh—"The Welsh Wizard." This week's issue is of even greater interest. It contains the most graphic and detailed account of the fight that took place at the National Sporting Club on May 30th, between Freddie Welsh and Packey McFarland. It is also a 32-page issue, and will be on sale at all newsagents, price 2d. With each copy is given a magnificent coloured supplement of Packey McFarland, the world-famous Chicago boxer, who shared the points in the great battle of last Monday night. From all appearance, this June 4th issue of "Boxing" promises to be the record number of that journal, and everyone should purchase a copy. Each issue of "Boxing" provides you with up-to-date boxing news from America, Paris, Australia, and the world over, and gives detailed reports of all boxing events that take place in Great Britain—an ideal journal for every English sportsman's home.

Mr. W. B. BENTLEY (Great Harwood).

I regret to have to announce the death of our esteemed member, Mr. Walter Brown Bentley, of Gt. Harwood, writes Mr. T. Slater, secretary of the National Quality Linnet Singing Association. On account of this our cup contest (for members only), which was to have been held on May 28th, has been postponed, and will be held on June 4th. The members wish to extend their heartfelt sympathy to his wife and relatives, for truly he was one of the best. The society was represented by Mr. W. H. Topping.

Mr. T. J. RICKARD (Redruth).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. F. Collins, chairman of the Camborne and the Redruth Fanciers' Associations, that I have to record the death of one of our members, Mr. T. J. Rickard, of Southgate, Redruth, at the age of 58. He was a very ardent fancier of the Norwich Plainhead, of which he had a fine stud. The Fancy have lost a good practical fancier, and one of those unselfish men so rarely met with, his service being always cheerfully given. The funeral took place on May 29th, at the Redruth Cemetery, and a very large concourse of people showed how well respected he was as a member of the Camborne and Redruth Associations; the members of both turned out well to pay their last tribute. We are sure all will join with us in sympathy with his four children and in their sad bereavement.

The Norwich Plainhead Club.

May I remind those societies who desire the patronage of the above-named, that the committee meet very shortly to allot same and that therefore applications must be sent to me at once? I should just like to say that at every show where our patronage was allotted last season, the Norwich section was the strongest section in the Show every class without exception (practically) being well filled, in many instances upwards of thirty per class.—JNO. HOPKINS, hon. secretary.

Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C.

Will societies desiring the patronage of the cinnamon marked Yorkshire Canary Club kindly apply? Our society are offering their patronage to four representative shows outside Yorkshire. Also, we are running a special novice competition in the Yorkshire Union novice classes to enable novice members to exhibit their cinnamon marked specimens to assist in gaining their novice medals. Shall be pleased to hear from any fancier desiring to join the club.—GRAYSHAW AND ALLEN, secretaries, Wormald Street, Flush, Heckmondwike.

Hints on Wild Seeds.

Get these seeds, if you can daily, as you use them. Storage is all very well for thistles, hardheads, and such things, but I find Goldies like the different seeds as they come nearly ripe each in their season, and this seems natural, and is a natural way of dealing with the bird. To convince myself of this, I have seen Goldies in flocks fly right over and past ripe thistles, and drop into an airsh field, or where root crops are, and feed off the seeds of chickweed, groundsel, and the numerous small weeds and grasses, which such places contain; proving that, like ourselves, Master Goldie appreciates his different foods in season.

You can, of course, give them colour food. I have moulted out birds a splendid colour with the above-named treatment, and the addition of a little colour food daily. The bath must be given every day, and if clear rainwater is used, all the better. I don't think it possible to have the winning bloom on, at any rate, you won't get it very early after the moult, if you withhold the bath. As the moult is finishing, you should give some extra large linseed. Some birds won't eat it, but most will, and to make sure, you can put a teaspoonful into a cup and pour on boiling water, and when cold, give them this water to drink; or buy crushed linseed (and be sure it is crushed, not ground, as all the oil should be left in the meal), and a pinch of this along with your egg and colour food will help to put on that satin-like bloom on your birds so much needed if you are to win at any show nowadays.

Of course, you will require a bird capable of turning out a winner. I say "capable," because there is a lot of difference in Goldies as there is in other birds. You want to get the large rich coloured bird; I like a dark ground-colour, a bird showing none of the foreign element—none of the very dead white marking behind the head nor about the upper and under tail coverts, nor the wide white collar, which some judges will go for. But the bird which is fairly large has a good dark under-colour throughout, with extra chestnut on breast, and all the prominent parts, such as blaze and wing bars, buttons, etc., sharply shown up; or in other words the colours to be clearly defined, not running into each other as is the case with some.

I know the birds differ, or vary, muchly, and some of our true British are as pale and white in some parts as any alien, and it is hard for a real good British bird to be made to stand down on account of such light plumage. But we have a standard, and should go by it, and as this dead white collar, etc., denotes foreign characteristics, such birds should not stand over a bird of higher standard merit in this respect. I don't think there are ten good exhibition Goldies to be found in each hundred taken.

Study the Show Points.

And before you commence to moult your birds for show, you should compare specimens and carry in your mind's eye what is wanted to win. Visit a good show and compare the few first birds in the class with those at the other end, and you will soon see if you have any worth getting to moult out winning coloured birds or not.

I remember nine or ten years or so ago, when Mr. G. E. Weston won 1st at the Palace in a class, I think, of 70 or 80 Finches. Our late friend Halse had seen my team a few days before that show, and he expressed himself satisfied that any of the three birds I was seeking his opinion on, was good enough to win at the coming event. They got in, I think, but somewhere else other than 1st instead. We must know a show Finch when we see one if we expect to win. On the occasion I am mentioning, that good fancier, Mr. Baldry, was much concerned at his non-success with a Goldie. Catching up his cage, he put it in front of Mr. Weston and myself, saying: "There; you can't beat that for quality!" appealing to us for so long that at last Mr. Weston said: "Yes; the quality is all right, but something more than quality is wanted." And he pointed out the defects in the Finch until we (or, at least, two of us) agreed it was not a show bird at all. I don't think the discussion was wasted, for since that time, I think the loser there has won more than one prize with Goldfinches.

My connection with the Fancy has brought its unpleasantness at times; and there are some who are ever ready to shy a stone at a fellow should he be given the chance to take one as a target. But on the other hand, I have made many friends, and some of my best friends of to-day are old friends of a while back, when I first began to exhibit. And I can truly say I appreciate such friendship muchly. I can also say I have no particle of envy or bad feeling toward a single fancier, however much we may have differed at times. When I think of the many pleasant meetings with old friends and the many kindnesses shown to Mrs. Browning and myself by fanciers, we are more than compensated for any other than pleasant episodes through which we have come. I consider the fact of being asked to write something for this Society's meeting all sufficient reward for my years of interest in its doings, and only wish I had something more enlightening and instructive to give you.

The Discussion.

After the delivery of the above lecture, Mr. White asked why boiling water was put on linseed, seeing it was soluble in cold; and, seeing linseed contained no oil, only water, why give it?—I have moulted Goldfinches without linseed and found the feather dry and colourless, but the same bird, although he would not eat the seed, had to drink the water or extract, and came out with a splendid colour and sheen; therefore, what I found to serve me well I advocate for others, and maintain that linseed does contain oil, and a good lot, too, and very good for birds moulting or finishing the moult.

Mr. Pope referred to a certain Goldfinch which had been kept in a small cage for years and never given a bath, yet had won 1st prize where Mr. Browning was judging. Mr. B. said he well remembered the bird under discussion, and found the bird the best in the class, and although there were several Goldies there, none were considered to be in show condition; even the winner could not expect to win in anything like competition. The bird was practically ruined by being kept in such a small cage; and it could not fly far if given the chance, as it had lost the power of flight and was quite crippled in this respect. Had this bird been used to rational treatment it would have made a good winner, but it was too late.

Mr. B., we learned, has bought Finches thus crippled by too small a cage, and almost lost. Some when put into a flight were afraid or unable to get off the perch at first. Yet, by gradually getting them to move about, he regained for them the use of their wings. One such bird won 1st at Cardiff in a class of about 40 entries. Mr. Clarke thought the bird mentioned by Mr. Pope had come out in fair face colour owing to its being kept in a light, sunny position, in a railway signal-box.—Mr. B.: I have moulted scores in the very same sort of place, and although I like plenty of fresh air and light, I don't think even a signal cabin will bring out the colours without feeding for it, and bathing, with good healthy surroundings.

There appeared to be no more questions when the Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Browning for his trouble in coming to Plymouth to give them this paper. This was seconded and carried unanimously, the Chairman remarking that it was one of the best papers the Society had had for a long time. Thus ended a pleasant evening, Mr. Browning saying that, although he could not tell them the names of many of the seeds, etc., eaten by Goldies, he would send them in some samples so that they could see for themselves what seeds to gather for their Goldies.

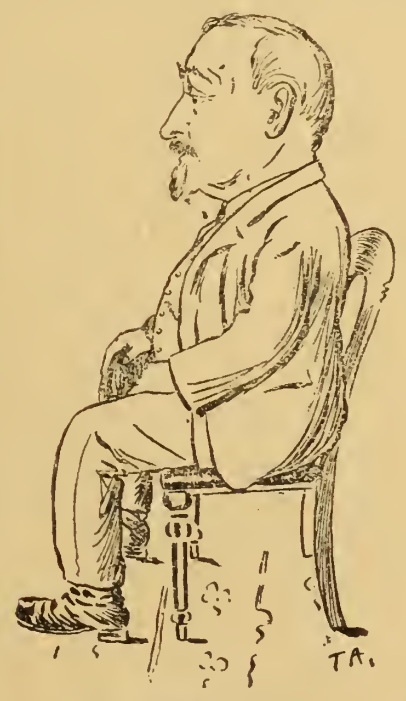
ON THE TOP RUNG:

And How I Got There.



(That well known Scottish artist and fancier, Mr. Thos. Aitken, has undertaken a commission for Cage Birds to visit within the next few weeks two or three prominent breeders North of the Border, and put on record for the benefit of our readers brief details of the methods by which they have attained success in the hobby. The last subject was Mr. George G. Henderson and his British birds.—Editor.)

Mr. William M'Clure

(Glasgow).

Mr. William M'Clure, who can claim to be the best known Scotch Fancy breeder in Scotland, is approaching now his sixtieth year, and is as hale and hearty a man of his age as one could wish to meet. He (as many readers will remember) was the proud owner of the birds which two years ago were claimed at Paisley show at the catalogue price of £100.

Mr. M'Clure keeps his birds in a room 15ft. by 9ft., this being devoted entirely to the birds and their belongings. It has one window (which faces south), and is fitted with a heating apparatus.

Ten pairs of Scotch Fancies, twelve pairs of "feeders," with eleven young (four of which are on the perches), comprised his stock of Canaries at the time of my visit. His cages (all wire, 22 by 14 by 10) are shelved off in rows one above the other, lengths of thick plate glass fitted between the cages acting as partitions.

I noticed Mr. M'Clure used the ordinary wooden nesting platforms, which most Scotch Fancy breeders adopt. He stated, however, that he preferred the earthenware pans favoured by Norwich Plainhead, etc., breeders. The latter he considers much cleaner in use, the only advantage of the platforms being that they save many a youngster from a fatal fall from the nest.

That noted Scotch Fancy breeder, Mr. McLennan, of Edinburgh, was visiting at Mr. M'Clure's place at the time I called, and he endorsed these statements. His own method of feeding and keeping his birds were practically the same as Mr. M'Clure's.

How do you feed your birds, Mr. M'Clure?—I feed on plain Canary seed, with egg-food, to which in the morning only I add a little boiled rape. This I leave in the cages till mid-day, when all that is not eaten I throw away, as it would sour if left longer.

How do you pair up?—I usually put up a yellow cock with a buff hen, or vice versa.

Do you double-buff at all?—I do not.

What sort of birds do you put together in order to obtain exhibition specimens?—My word! if I kent how to do that my fortune would be made. One never kens what like of young ones a pair is going to throw.

Do you inbreed?—No; but I believe in pedigree breeding. Scotch Fancies are too delicate to stand any inbreeding.

Yes; I introduce Belgian blood into my birds.

You don't breed all your birds?—No; I get in from three to five new birds every year. I could never do unless I introduced fresh blood.

I put all my Scotch Fancy eggs under "feeders." This is more or less just a habit of mine; in fact, I might say of the majority of Scotch Fancy breeders. Most Scotch Fancies are excellent feeders.

How do you train your birds to show off?— Training! it's a piece of nonsense. There's na such thing as training a Scotch Fancy; at least, I dinna ken any method of training. If you hae a guid young yin, you hae a guid yin, and it requires na trainin'. You canna vera weel train a bad yin into a guid yin. Maybe if a bird's a wee wild—that is, flies up into the wires of the cage when handled (which is a fault)—it will need to be taken up in the cage occasionally, so as to make it hae a wee bit confidence in ye.

I keep my birds in the breeding cages all the year round, occasionally letting them into the flights. These flights are about six feet long and are wired only in front. During the show season I put the birds into the show cages only a day or two before the show is held to which I intend sending them.

How do you suggest a novice should start breeding Scotch Fancies?—He should, after a year or two at breeding common Canaries, invest in a pair at a fair price, say £10, from a reliable breeder whose stock is known. It is fatal to invest in, say, a cock from Tom, a hen from Dick, and another cock or hen from Harry. Of course it all depends on the bulk of the purse of the individual concerned. If he can afford to pay more than the sum mentioned, certainly he should do so. I myself pay as much as £12 for a single bird; never more.

MEALWORMS: HOW TO KEEP AND BREED THEM.

[We have recently received from readers many requests for information upon the breeding and keeping of mealworms, and print below part of a paper upon "British Birds," written by Mr. C. Houlton, which deals with these subjects; the said paper was published in Cage Birds during the early part of 1909.—Editor.]

With regard to mealworms, these are so well known and extensively bred and advertised that little need be said by me respecting them. Of course, almost any British cage bird will devour a mealworm; but there is no necessity to give these to the seed eaters proper. Part seed eaters may have them freely. Insectivorous birds, both large and small, may also have them, but for the smaller species, the worms should first be rendered hors-de-combat, so to speak, by wounding them behind the head, just over where the legs are, and then when the birds swallow the worms there is no chance of internal damage to the crop, as there might be if the worms were swallowed alive and whole. The flesh maggots of the fly (gentles) are also better killed by scalding just before being given to the birds—just enough for one meal at a time.

My method of breeding mealworms was as follows: I procured two very large boxes or tea chests, about 2 feet 6 inches square, and 3 feet high. I had close fitting lids to these, and in the centre of the lid was a piece cut out about 4 inches square, and a piece of perforated brass plate, or brass wire gauze, was fastened over this opening. This was for ventilation.

At the bottom of the box I placed a false bottom inside, about an inch less all round in dimensions. The false bottom had two ribs nailed across it underneath about an inch thick, which left a space between it and the box bottom proper. All over this I would spread a piece of old flour sack, cut to size (flat). A thick piece of brown paper formed the next layer. Then I would put in some crushed oats, bran, and meal (such as barleymeal) about an inch thick. Another piece of sack, and a piece of brown paper saturated with black treacle and brewers' ale I put next. This should be soaked and left to dry pretty well before being put in the box. Another piece of sack is put on this soaked paper, and on top of this some more crushed oats, bran, and meal.

Don't, when doing this, put any flesh, meat, or dead birds in. I put in another piece of sack and brown paper next, and some more oats, bran, and meal; and on top of these I placed a piece of sack which had been soaked with black treacle and beer. I took care not to put too much treacle and beer, but just enough to allow of its being well absorbed into the dry sack. I always had a good supply of mealworms after I had established the box by this method.

I used to take my mealworms out of one box at a time, allowing the other time to replenish the stock. If kept in warm places, the worms will rapidly thrive and increase.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Typical Yorkshires and How to Train Them.

By W. DOWNING (Manchester).

It is the writer's hope that in a few years our lovely Yorkshire Canary will have become a bird much in advance of our six-and-three-quarter-inch beauty of the present day. I like Yorkshire cocks to be a wee bit over the standard length, both for breeding and exhibiting purposes, and so do the judges. And rightly so. But I think there should be a limit; a quarter of an inch over the standard length should not be exceeded, and similarly, a quarter of an inch under ought also to be alright. But to use an "Irishism," the judges adjudicating round the standard six-and three-quarter inches are all "one-sided," for most of them go for the "big 'uns" every time, and I have seen some "rough 'uns" at the top of the class with frills like dandies, while smaller birds, with breasts as smooth and as shapely as an egg, bodies clean cut and feathers as close as a well-fitting glove—take a much lower position. Personally I don't like the birds too big, as I think that when you get them over seven inches in length they lose in gracefulness and are not nearly so smart in action as the medium-sized birds.

The big cocks I pair up to those of my hens that are a wee bit on the small side, and if one of the pair has a tick or a mark or two about its body, I think they are likely to throw birds with good colour. And if out of two imperfect birds I can breed youngsters a point or two nearer perfection than their parents I am well satisfied with the progress made. Then if "a gem" should happen to come my way—well, it helps to cheer us on our way, and we try again.

I mated a pair as above—a long, raking, marked buff cock (a bit rough in feather, but in other respects a decent stock cock), to a yellow Cinnamon hen (very small, but a gem of the first water in all other respects)—and got from them a nest of three. Two of these were yellow Cinnamon cocks, but they were only a little over six inches in length, the other bird being a green hen. Each of the three had one or two light feathers in the tail.

How to Breed Long Birds.

I gave one of the cocks to a friend and the other one I paired up with an extra large clear buff hen; but I had wretched luck with them until July, when I got a nest of two from them, only, however, to find the hen deserted the young on the third day, and wanted to go to nest again. In disgust I put the cock back into her cage again, and after a few days she again went to nest and hatched out two more youngsters; this time she fed them admirably until they could do for themselves. Both birds were good. One is a Cinnamon-marked buff cock, only an eighth of an inch short of seven inches, possessing beautiful feather and of fine quality, and now almost through his moult, and singing. The other one, a hen, was also a cinnamon-marked, a likely one for turning out very good in length.

We managed to rear the first nest by putting the eggs in other nests, but we had to change them several times, and then had to finish up by hand-feeding the young. The two birds thus hand-reared are also a little longer than the father. One of these two is a marked buff cock, intensely deep in colour, and carries a wealth of "frosting." This I set down to the mixing of cinnamon and green blood in the grandparents.

I have also reared a cinnamon-marked yellow hen that is fully six-and-three-quarter inches in length, and is the product of another small cock and large hen. So I have proved to my own satisfaction that we can breed long birds from little cocks if they are mated rightly. The big hens, as a rule, are sluggish, and are not so full of activity as the smaller ones, but, if you do happen to possess a big hen or two that will feed, I feel sure you are as likely to get good length youngsters as you are from the opposite mode of pairing.

But I must confess that my favourite pair are: both cock and hen of medium size, and "breedy," with plenty of leg, clean cut away underneath, good heads, etc., not too much shoulder, and a proud stand on the perch.

Training for "Position."

The Yorkshire has been bred for generations with an eye to its upright position and boldness, and I think this is its chief charm, both at home and on the bench. I have heard some of the older breeders of the Yorkshire say that you cannot permanently improve this position by training, but I humbly beg to differ. You can improve the position of your birds if you begin at the right time and with the right stuff.

If any of your stock birds stand across the perch like a Norwich, get rid of them. Breed only with birds of good carriage. Breed for position and then improve the youngsters by education when they come. One of the easiest ways I know for getting a young Yorkshire to crouch is the having your perches too near the roof of the cage. I have seen such birds in more than one room. Keep your perches down as low as ever your cages will allow. Give the birds plenty of head room; the more they have the more likely they are to cultivate a bold upright carriage.

I use good, lofty, double breeding cages, ten inches deep, twenty inches high, and each compartment two feet wide. I use a movable wire partition to divide the cage off at the centre, then if I am using a hen that is likely to pluck her young when they are about thirteen days old, I remove them just as they are in the nest-box into the empty half of the cage, hanging it up close to the partition at a suitable height to prevent plucking; and I have always found the old birds to feed well through the bars.

Feeding and Training Young.

Then when the young ones are out of the nest and beginning to pick up for themselves I give them crushed hemp, and milk sop, made in the following manner: first I set the milk on one side until the cream rises; this I remove, and then boil the milk; I put stale bread into the hot milk and let it stand a short time, and then I remove from the bread as much of the milk as possible and heat up with a fork, adding (if I think fit) a wee bit of maw seed. To begin with I put a little of the crushed hemp on the top of the bread, and I know I will soon have the pleasure of seeing the youngsters "going for" it and enjoying it too. You may also sweeten it a little with sugar.

My birds have this food for a portion of every day, with a little egg-food in addition. Then I gradually get them on to white Canary seed, and drop the egg-food; but I continue the bread and milk right up to the time of putting them on colour-food.

Also when the young have left the nest I hang a show-cage on the front of the breeder and keep it there, removing the wire partition and putting in its place a sheet of glass of the same size, the bottom half of the glass being painted over to prevent the youngsters seeing through, and the top portion I leave clear. Then I arrange the perches so that the young birds can see into the next compartment as they flit from perch to perch. I drop the perches a little at a time, until I get them so low that the birds have to stand up on the perch to look over the painted portion. Take care in doing this not to make the young stretch themselves too much, for fear you make them hollow in the back.

I also hang up a small looking-glass at each end of the cage, manipulating the perches near these in the same manner as for the centre glass. It is most amusing to see the birds straightening up to admire themselves presumably in the glass. These glasses are also most useful in single breeding cages and long flights. But don't place them too near the front of the cage. I use the same methods when I have young birds in each end of the cage, and all the year round my cages are thus equipped; and I can assure my readers that if they try this method, or something similar, they will soon see a marked improvement in their stock. I venture to say they will also find the improvement to be permanent.

Some breeders pooh-poohed the idea when they first saw it acted upon in my bird-room, but they are now using it, and several of them have told me that the idea has made a marked improvement in all their stock.

I stretch a stout cord across a corner of the bird-room and fasten it to the wall, bending bits of cage wire to form hooks for the purpose; and when the birds are in the show cages I hang them up all in a row. One bird moves and he sets the whole row of cages vibrating. Occasionally I take a stick and draw it along the bottoms of the cages, and it is surprising how soon the birds become steady by this plan. I also keep changing their positions on the line by lifting them from one hook and putting them on another, changing each bird.

Give them food and water, and you can leave them on the line as long as you care to. Mine are sometimes left on for days at a stretch.

A Useful Cage Scraper.

Sent by Mr. R. G. Bremner, 44, Roslea Drive, Dennistoun, Glasgow.

I enclose a sketch of and particulars for making a cage-scraper, which may be used to advantage during the breeding season when one does not want to unnecessarily frighten the birds by withdrawing the sand-drawer. First procure a tin box about 4ins. by 3ins. by ¾in., and take off the lid; cut off one side and trim it as in the fig. Then make a wooden handle about 2ins. long and ¼in. thick, and screw on to the back of the tin, which completes the idea.—Robt. G. Bremner.

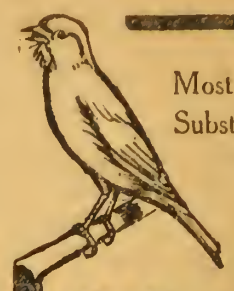
A Home-made Nest-pan.

Sent by Miss L. C. Gibbs, 30, York Road, Upper Edmonton, N.



This nest may be of some use to breeders. I think the earthenware pans are too cold, especially if we have a dull Spring. Procure a piece of wire about 15½ inches long, and bend round to make a circle (A), leaving about half an inch to solder. Next take four wires 8 inches long, and bend them round (B) to form a half-circle, with hooks to be bent over the rim and soldered. Place the four equal distances apart and bind some thin wire round the four at the bottom to keep them in their place (C). Put the hooks outside; the young ones will not then get scratched. Cut a piece of felt to the shape of "D" to fit inside, and tack it to the wire with needle and cotton, so that the old birds do not pull it out. This makes a nice warm lining, and affords plenty of ventilation. Cut a piece of wood 6 inches by 7 inches, and round off two of the corners; cut a hole in the centre to receive the nest, and fasten same with a couple of staples. Cut another piece of wood 6 inches by 6 inches, and make a hole in it as at "E." This is the back, and should be fastened to the bottom with screws. This completes a nest (F) which will last a lifetime, and is very cheaply made. L. C. Gibbs.

Wild Bird Life.

Concerning the Cuckoo.

One of the most familiar and pleasing sounds just now of the countryside is the call of the Cuckoo. The birds appear to be very plentiful, and the note strikes the ear wherever there are fields, woods, and commons. The other morning I counted five of them together, not flying in a compact flock as other birds do, but spread out considerably, although evidently in attendance upon each other. And when they settled they were all in different trees some distance apart. One can only conjecture that these were males in attendance upon a female; unfortunately we have no ready means of distinguishing the sexes, or we should be able to solve many problems relating to Cuckoo life, which are at present somewhat mysterious. The birds were evidently in a state of great excitement, and their continued calling caused quite a bubbub. Out across the breezy common where the bright sunshine seemed to give additional colour to the golden gorse a single bird could be heard in the distance, but each call sounded nearer. The Cuckoo at large is not by any means a graceful bird, and he looked particularly ungraceful trying to balance himself on (of all places) a telegraph wire. When we caught sight of him, his immediate attendant was a very small bird, probably a Linnet or Pipit (for these birds abound in this spot); which had a rather odd effect, the smaller bird looking quite a midget as he sat two or three feet away from the larger one. Continuing his journey across the open, he was accompanied by all the small birds in the immediate neighbourhood, so that he eventually had quite a big following. It is still an unsolved problem why the smaller birds have such an apparent aversion to the Cuckoo, and unite in worrying it until it is well away from the vicinity of their nests. Evidently they look upon it in some way as a common enemy, that is of no use to them, and therefore is likely to do them or their charges some injury. Every species is more or less ready to drive off an intruder from the immediate neighbourhood, and it may be after all only the ordinary habit of doing so which causes them to be so ready to mob the Cuckoo. His strange likeness to the more deadly Hawk no doubt assists in causing them so much uneasiness.

GREAT £20 CASH PRIZES COMPETITION FOR READERS OF "CAGE BIRDS."

In order to stimulate interest in "Cage Birds" between now and the first week in August we have decided to institute a competition on the undermentioned lines and offer £20 in cash prizes upon the following scale:—

First Prize	TEN POUNDS.
Second Prize	THREE POUNDS.
Third Prize	TWO POUNDS.
Fourth Prize	ONE POUND.
Fifth Prize	ONE POUND.
Sixth Prize	ONE POUND.
Seventh Prize	ONE POUND.
Eighth Prize	ONE POUND.

Also Twenty Consolation Prizes of a Bound Volume or a Framed Plate, at the Winner's option.

In every copy of "Cage Birds" published from now till July 23rd next, we shall print a triangular coupon. This coupon (see below) is provided with a panel upon each side, each panel must be filled in with the name and address in full of a new reader of the paper. One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each coupon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

For each coupon so sent in with three halfpence in stamps we will send free copies of "Cage Birds" to each of those whose names and addresses appear thereon. Each of these free copies will contain a coupon which in its turn will be available for competition purposes if sent to us properly filled in with three further names and addresses.

RULES.

It must be borne in mind by competitors that—

1. Each coupon must be legibly and correctly filled up (pencil will do) with the full names and addresses of three new readers of "Cage Birds." (Either actual or possible new readers).
2. The prizes will go to the competitors who send in the largest number of properly filled in coupons.
3. The competition will close finally on Wednesday, July 27th, and no coupons received after first post on that date will be allowed to count in the competition.
4. The Editor's decision on any point in dispute will be final.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1/- for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 506

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1910 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

I have two pairs of Yorkshires in a cold room facing north. One pair brought up three cocks and two hens in the first round. The second round they have five youngsters, and are now building again. The other is sitting on four eggs, one being clear. Am I doing well enough? S. SNAPE (Preston).

I have had splendid luck with my birds. I have 4 pairs of Canaries (all Norwich) and 15 young ones on the sticks off the first round—9 in the nest and 8 eggs incubating in the second round. I have one hen with 8 eggs in one nest. I think that is a record number for one bird to lay in one nest. And I have one double-yolk egg in another nest. All are outside bred.—E. PLAYER (London, E.).

Loughboro' and District C.B.A.

Some of the members are very busy now. Here are a few of the results: Mr. Foster 30 youngsters, Mr. Sharp 28, Mr. Morris 16, Mr. Green 28, and Mr. Jeffery 10, all doing well. A number of members have not done so well in the first round owing to the severe weather we have had, but are now having better results.—G. JEFFERY, secretary.

In the Courts.

Taking Young Birds and Eggs.

Two summonses were heard at the Bath Police Court on May 21st, under the Wild Birds Protection Act. Walter Dowding was summoned for having in his possession on May 14th two young Thrushes, which had been recently taken. The defendant admitted having the birds in his possession, but said he was ignorant of the law. The magistrates said they appreciated the straightforward way in which the defendant had stated his case, and discharged him on payment of 5s. costs.

The second defendant was Arthur Pope, who was summoned for having two young Blackbirds in his possession, under similar circumstances. The defendant said that about ten weeks ago a blind man came to his house and offered the birds for sale. He said they were about a month old. He paid 1s. 6d. for them. The defendant said he was not aware of the Act prohibiting the buying or taking of birds between March 1st and August 1st. He was discharged on payment of 5s. costs.

At Carlisle on May 28th, B. B. Mewburn, coal exporter, Sunderland; J. Lee, coalminer, Haltwhistle; and W. Raw, signalman, Langley Park, Durham, pleaded guilty to a charge of taking forty Redshank and Skylark eggs from Rockliffe Marsh, near Carlisle, on May 1st. The Superintendent of Police produced the order of the Cumberland County Council under which the eggs of these birds are protected, and each defendant was fined 10s. and costs.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Court of Appeal.

S. Campbell. Glasgow.—Theoretically, it is true, if a pair of birds perfectly matched are put together, and several unions have taken place, that it is possible for the whole clutch to be fertile, even though the cock is removed as soon as the first egg is laid; it sometimes occurs in actual practice, and there is authentic record of a hen having been placed with a cock for a few hours, and then removed before the first egg had been laid, and yet the clutch of four proved fertile. On the other hand, it must be admitted this is the exception rather than the rule, and more frequently one finds frequent unions taking place apparently successfully right up to the evening when the last egg of a clutch is laid, and yet all the clutch may prove unfertile. It is not essential for a union to take place for each egg, yet it by no means follows that if such unions do occur the eggs must necessarily be fertilised. It would be courting failure to act on your friend's advice, and remove the cock as soon as the first egg was laid. The safer plan is to let him remain until the evening of the day the third is laid. If he is then removed, and the hen lays five, there is every probability of the fifth being fertile.

A Late Start.

J. C. Gallowgate.—You must have got a little mixed concerning the proper diet. If you give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape in unlimited quantity during the breeding season that is sufficient for a staple, and the extra box containing plain canary only is superfluous. In addition give a small teaspoonful of soft food with a pinch of a mixture of maw, and gold of pleasure added to it every second day, and on the alternate days half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Give two or three dandelion leaves daily. Continue this treatment until the complement of eggs has been laid, then drop all the extras, and give the staple seed diet only whilst the hen is sitting. The food you use serves a useful purpose when there is no time to prepare ordinary egg food. As regards whether it is quite as good, I have nothing to add to the opinion frequently expressed. I am not clear whether the cock you call a "variegated Cinnamon dark" is really Cinnamon or a variegated green; and you do not say whether the hen is a Cinnamon or not. It is impossible to give any definite reply without exact particulars. If the cock is a variegated Cinnamon and the hen not a Cinnamon, the young would probably be variegated Cinnamons, green, and green-marked. All birds showing Cinnamon colour would be hens.

A Young Invalid, etc.

R.C.—(1) There is no reason why you should not be able to use this hen again for a single nest provided she is fit. If she has not laid any more eggs since the shell-less one, take the nest out for a day or two, and give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops each of sherry and cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it each day for a week. Give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts white millet, inga, and gold of pleasure every second day. See she has a supply of cuttlefish. Return nest box in three or four days. (2) Its outlook is not very rosy. It may quite possibly be congenital, but I am rather inclined to think your birds are exposed to very unfavourable influences—damp, draughts, or extreme fluctuations. I really cannot tell you whether the fault lies with the father. There cannot be much the matter with him to behave as you say he does, and you give no other possible clue to anything which lays him open to suspicion. You would do best to look well into your general management, and see if you cannot find some way in which the birds are subject to such bad influences as named above. There can be little good in dosing such a young bird, but if you like you can try the effect of giving half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake daily for a fortnight or so, and mix with it three drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion. Instead of plain water for drinking give this decoction every second day for a week, and if bird shows an improvement continue giving it until well. Decoction: Put half a teaspoonful of linseed into a cup, add a piece of Spanish liquorice the size of a large pea, and half a chlorate of potash lozenge; pour over it half a teacupful of boiling water, stir until all is dissolved, allow to stand until cold, then strain off enough to fill the drinker, add six drops of glycerine, and give instead of pure water.

After Many Years.

J. McElroy.—It is always well to stick to the method that has carried one through successfully for a long period, and not throw it over for something fresh at the first failure without very good cause. One of our oldest and best authorities laid down the dictum that there was a period of good and bad luck for every fancier if he only stuck to his guns long enough for both to come. Your friend must not let a trifle like this count much. His own method of treatment must be good to have succeeded so long, but you give absolutely no details about it, so I am at a loss what to suggest. In a general way feed and treat from the time the young are hatched, as has been repeated almost weekly in these columns. Do not give large quantities of egg food at a time, and see it is perfectly fresh and pure, and made palatable. See also that your eggs are from perfectly healthy fowls, and preferably those having a good free run. Do not add any moisture except what is already in the egg, and try after the second day equal parts egg, bread-crumb, and stale sponge cake crumbs, with a pinch of maw seed mixed in. The first and second day use two parts egg to one part each bread and sponge cake. Use only good wholesome stale wheaten bread, made without the use of alum and such "improvers." On the fourth day begin to give a little crisp lettuce, or chickweed, fresh, at least twice daily, and if there are any signs of flagging add a little soaked rape in a separate vessel, and just a pinch of crushed hemp on the fifth day. Do not, however, begin to give hemp freely until the young are ten or twelve days old. When first hatched add a small pinch of Epsom salts to the water each day, until midday, then throw out and give fresh, pure water for the rest of the day. As twice daily, and if there are any signs of flagging give them a bath with a small teaspoonful of common salt dissolved in it.

Brevities.

Returning Cock (G. Smith).—Sorry your last letter did not reach me in time for reply in last issue. You should not return the cock to the hen until the young are beginning to leave the nest, if she does not start nesting earlier. If she is wanting to begin again very badly at the time, you may return him when the young are twelve or fourteen days old, and give the hen another nest box. But do not do this unless it seems absolutely necessary. By keeping him away until the young can leave the nest, they can be immediately transferred to a nursery cage should he maltreat them; and thus be kept quite safe from injury, whilst the parents will go on feeding them through the wires.

Birds Ailing (J. S. Burgess).—You should not use sawdust on the floor during the breeding season; clean, gritty, calcareous sand is much better. Your feeding is not correct; you give too much hemp, and should not give this seed regularly at all except when young are being reared. You should also omit the gold of pleasure from the soft food, as this is only suitable for use on special occasions. See that all your seeds and other foods are quite sound and sweet. In addition to your present staple diet give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a week, and a spray of chickweed or flower head of groundsel daily. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence daily for three days, and after that six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week.

Enfargement (Sparrow).—You do not say whether the bird has been mated or not, but I am rather inclined to think she is suffering from prolapsus, which most frequently occurs after egg-laying. Still, I cannot be quite sure from your description, and would advise you to show it to a veterinary surgeon if possible, or your own medico. If the former is the case you should well bathe the exposed portion with a fairly strong solution of boracic acid—a small teaspoonful of acid dissolved in half a teacup of hot water, and allowed to stand until cold before use. After bathing a few minutes try to gently work the protrusion within the vent, until it is as near as can be a normal size. Then insert a piece of nutgall ointment the size of a hemp seed. If it returns bathe at once with a little cold tea, and put it back again. Repeat this each time it returns, and insert a scrap of the ointment each time. Keep bowels free with an extra supply of green food for a time. Do not try to breed with the bird this year, if at all again. To ensure successful treatment these cases should be attended to immediately they occur.

A Clear Nest (Dishcartened).—There was really no necessity for you to separate the birds again. It is possible the weather was the chief cause of the first round of eggs being clear, or even, as the hen appears to be such a virago, that this was the means of banishing courage from the crestfallen Benedict. Feed as advised to "J. C. Gallowgate," and for soft food give either a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, or a small teaspoonful of egg food. After a few days of this, if the birds seem ready, mate them again, and continue feeding as advised until the hen has gone to nest again. The birds would probably do better in a cosy room where no fire is kept, than in the kitchen. You can do nothing for the bare patch whilst birds are breeding. If they are not troubled with insect pests let them alone, and the thing will probably come all right when the birds moult.

A Sleepy Head (Joey).—Am doubtful whether this bird will do any good at breeding or anything else. Still, you can but try if he comes into condition. See all your seeds and foods are sweet and sound. In addition to your staple diet give a piece of bread, the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk and sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a week, and twice only during the next week, and on the alternate days a half-teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts white millet, inga, linseed, and gold of pleasure. Give a little green food—chickweed, groundsel, lettuce, or dandelion—daily. In the drinking water give six drops each of syrup of rhubarb and syrup of buckthorn daily for three days, and every second day for a week afterwards. During the latter period give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid on the alternate days, and continue giving it every second day for a fortnight.

Green Roller Ill (I.M.D.).—I have very little to form an opinion from, but unless the illness was of recent origin I should hardly expect anything so serious as you suggest. If that opinion was correct with the few symptoms you give, the bird is doubtless beyond help now. If not, see that it is in a cosy place, quite free from draughts and extreme heat and cold. Put it on a diet of plain canary seed only as staple for a week, and during the time give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar each day. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for two days, and every second day for the next week give six drops of tincture of calumba and four of aromatic sulphuric acid. After this treatment put the bird on the diet advised to "Alice," but let the staple consist of two parts canary to one part summer rape.

Breeding with Bald Hen (Tollcross).—I do not approve of breeding from birds physically defective, as the chances are all in favour of producing a number of delicate, weakly specimens which are a constant worry and disappointment; and if you dispose of them they bring your stock into ill repute. It is just possible the bareness may be due to insect pests; examine bird, cage, and nest to see. Turn the hen into a large flight, where she can get plenty of vigorous exercise; allow unlimited bathing facilities, feeding rather liberally on a varied seed diet, with a good regular supply of various green stuffs and fruit and berries in season, but little of any other soft food. Limit the latter to a small piece of bread and milk twice a week, dusted slightly with chlorate of potash, and flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with maw seed. Slightly moisten the bare place twice a week for a month with a small feather dipped in tincture of perchloride of iron and glycerine mixed together in equal parts; keep her on this treatment until she has moulted, when she may come through in perfect plumage. You could then breed with her next year.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

For Nest Making.

Stonechat.—Moss, bents, tiny twigs or rootlets, dried grass, hair and wool, are all that any ben British Finch requires to choose from in the way of nesting materials. Most of these are conveniently supplied by the well-known "medicated nest-bags" sold at the bird-shops and seed dealers. The other things can easily be gathered in the lanes. Personally, I find the best thing is to get old (first-round) Linnet, Greenfinch, Hedge Sparrow, Blackbird, etc., nests, and pull them to pieces, after stoving them in a moderately hot oven for twenty minutes or so. The nest of practically any small species will answer, and after the wild bird's first brood is out and about will be quite early enough for the average Hybrid couple to have nesting material. If you cannot by any means manage the above (some country fancier would doubtless oblige you), then Bullie hens will do quite well with nothing but short-cut lengths of dry hay, supplemented with the fibre obtained by cutting up a cheap (or old) cokernut fibre doormat. The latter is very much appreciated. Hen Bullies don't care for moss at all, as a rule.

Muling Hens Not Nesting.

Novice, Jersey.—It is not easy for me to say why your hen Canaries have not yet showed signs of nesting. It may be any one of several possible causes. Young (late-hatched) hens of the previous year are often late in starting (I have one myself now which has yet to commence); so are old, almost worn-out, hens; or hens which have been weakened by over-laying or too late breeding the previous season; or which had a bad lingering moult; or hens which for some other cause (such as recent illness) are in a low way and cannot be screwed up to concert pitch. Likewise hens bought late in the spring are often upset by the change of quarters, and so fail to breed. Hen Canaries in high breeding condition simply insist upon going to nest. Have you got hold of some old hens, maybe worn out? As I have said, not being able to see and examine the birds, I don't find it easy to advise you. If you could obtain a young loud-singing cock Canary and put with the hens for a week or so this might result in their getting to business. I hope you are not making the mistake of interfering with the birds over-much, or of continually chopping and changing the cock bird about with different partners.

Pet Bird with Red-mite.

Troubled E. T.—If any red mite are about, they increase at an astonishing rate during the hot weather unless effectually checked. The latter cannot be accomplished unless the bird affected is moved into a temporary cage whilst the old one is cleaned. Any cheap small cage will do, if clean, of course. The operations are easy enough, and need not occupy much time. You should catch the bird and dust plenty of Keating's insect powder thoroughly amongst its plumage, seeing that it goes well down to the skin (a soft camel-hair "mop" brush is handy to use). Then wrap the bird for five or ten minutes in a piece of clean cloth (old, soft calico, for instance), leaving the roll open at the head end, of course. After unwrapping the bird, give another light dusting and return to the temporary cage. The old cage should be thoroughly gone over (every crevice, joint, and wire hole, perches as well) with a brush soaked in turpentine; stand in the open to dry for a few hours. There will be no red mite left on it then. An all-wire cage could be placed in boiling suds, if preferred. Afterwards spray the Mule daily with water made bitter by the addition of a little infusion of quassia (from a chemist) or let it bathe in such water. A hand wash (with soap) by a skilful fancier is very helpful in ridding a bird of red mite.

Hints about a Nightingale.

Novice, Molesey.—Yes, the general feeding you outline will answer admirably, and you should have no difficulty in keeping your Gale in good condition providing it is in good order when delivered to you by the fancier who has undertaken to hand-rear it. You can easily tell when young Nightingales are in their nest feather, for then they are spotted all over. As they moult into the adult garb (plain brown, broadly speaking), these spots, of course, disappear. As regards the winter, our English Nightingale, I am sure, does not relish the cold in a snug indoor room, unheated, these birds suffer during cold damp weather, and visibly so during hard frost or a spell at a very low temperature. There is no special treatment required during the moult, so long as the bird keeps in condition (or health). It is a safe plan, however, to mix three or four spots of the finest cod-liver oil in their daily food supply thrice a week; oftener if they show signs of drooping. But don't overdo the quantity of oil, or the bird may turn against its food. Get the tasteless oil. Of course, I look upon it as almost unnecessary to say that the moult is the period when the best of food only should be supplied, with insect life in every possible variety; keep up the live ants' eggs for so long as you can obtain them.

Non-success.

Merthyr.—I am sorry to hear of your failure. Still, I adhere to my statement of last week that young mules are easier to rear than young Canaries. If one's hens feed properly I am sure there is no excuse for losing young Mules. I reared a good number last season without any loss worthy of mention, and with very little trouble. The chief thing (in my opinion) is to arrange for a constant supply of seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse, and these can be grown in profusion in any back garden or gathered in practically every country lane. I prefer egg and good home-made bread (crumbled), with a little castor sugar dusted amongst it; nothing else (seed, etc.) with it. In addition, I give Canary and summer rape (mixed) in the seed-hopper, with cracked hemp in a separate dish, with a little crushed safflower or sunflower seeds, or a few crushed groats or a little coarse oatmeal amongst it. I give a few young and tender sprays of chickweed when the "babies" are two days old, and quickly increase the quantity until I am giving this ad libitum, with seeding shepherd's purse in addition. Some of my hens feed almost solely upon these green-foods. Boiled seed is quite unnecessary. An occasional dose of sulphate of soda in the drinking water (as much as just covers a shilling, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls) is a grand thing to revivify a hen flagging at her duties. If the nest gets badly overrun with red mite, this will often cause a hen to "chuck it up," as you put it.

Another Pet Bullfinch.

Miss Reed.—In this case your friend was quite right. Hemp seed is a favourite delicacy with Bullfinches, but should be given sparingly; reserve it, in fact, for your taming experiments. These birds are apt to get fat and wheezy if given hemp without stint. I have found that safflower and sunflower seeds are far better than hemp, as a regular thing, for the Bullfinch. The following would make your bird an excellent stock mixture, and any good seedsman would put it up for you: Canary and teazle two pints of each, linseed, summer rape, and charlock, half a pint of each, safflower and sunflower a quarter pint of each. In a tin you could keep a mixture of niger two parts, maw one part, and give a pinch twice a week. Then you have thistle and dandelion seed, and wild seed mixture, small feeds of which may also be occasionally given. For green foods give any of the following, according to season: Shepherd's purse, groundsel tops, chickweed, flowering grasses, watercress, lettuce, rape or Canary seedlings, etc. The seeding kinds may be freely given. Bullies are very fond of mar[illegible]berries (black, privet, etc.), also fruit, and the buds of fruit trees and bushes; on such things they feed largely when wild. Charlock, dock, thistles, hardheads, and many other wild seeding plants these birds are also very fond of; likewise, an occasional mealworm.

Caging Finches.

Tynesider.—Am glad to hear that Mr. Browning's remarks have done good; I quite agree with all he said regarding these tiny cages—they are unfitted to keep birds in as a regular thing, and their continued use should be discouraged. I can quite understand that you have erred in ignorance, however, for a good number of "back cages" are to be seen. The cage I use myself (and most well-known fanciers of my acquaintance) is that which has now come to be widely known as the "Finch Stock Cage." It is made and stocked by all up-to-date cage-makers; you could get one from most of those advertising in our columns. My own are 16 and 18 inches long, by 11 high and 8 and 9 wide. The front bottom rail is made very deep (not less than 3½ inches) and a hole is cut in this, through which the seed-drawer runs, to the back of the cage. The perches are two in number, and they rest on the bottom rail. In position, one should be on the wire next the water-hole, and the other about 3 inches from the seed-drawer. This gives a jump of about nine inches in the smallest size of cage. In shape they should be square underneath, rounded at the top—one rounded to a half-circle, the other only the corners taken off. One perch should be a full three-eighths wide, and the other a full half-inch; thickness, about three-eighths of an inch. Variety in the size and shape of the perches prevents clipped claws, stiff claws, and other similar troubles. As a colour for the insides of stock cages, a very pale blue cannot be beaten; a very pale green, however, is just as suitable.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.,

Waxbills Dying.

W. E. S.—(1) There is little doubt but that this bird died from the hardship of importation, or from some infection, contracted during that period. Care should be exercised in giving birds both sand and water, which have come a long journey, as after being without both for a time, they take to excess to their own hurt. Only permit newly-imported birds to take a few sips of water straight away. Then a little more after a short period, and so on, till their thirst is satisfied, when the water can be left in the cage as usual, and sand must be introduced with the same care. (2) I should make the drinking water just saline with Epsom Salts till relief is given, then afterwards a little Parrish's Chemical Food could be given. If you have a garden, and can give the bird a small spray of blighty foliage from any non-poisonous plant or bush it will help greatly; at this period of the year supply flowering (seeding) grass liberally as greenfood; mix just a pinch of blue maw seed with their ordinary seed mixture every other day for a time. To prevent discouragement I may say that even with experienced aviculturists a certain percentage of losses are unavoidable when purchasing newly-imported birds.

Cause of Death?

Alnwick.—Your bird died from a blow on the back of its crown, possibly by flying upwards against some sharp corner, but more probably by a blow from the bill of one of its fellow-captives; the latter I think is the real cause, and the Budgerigars I take to be the culprits, though it is possible a Saffron Finch might be the guilty one. A pair of Zebra Finches may take possession of the whole place and blow his own little penny trumpet sort of call. They may disturb, but I do not think they are responsible for the Avadavat's death. Again, you must note that when you turn a fresh pair of birds into an existing community it always causes more or less of an upset of tranquility, but as a rule they soon settle down, though in the temporary bickerings which occur a mishap may occur as in your case. To the list of birds you supply you could add Grey and Green Singing Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Chestnut, Yellow-rumped, Sharp-tailed, and Striated Finches, White Java Sparrows, Green Avadavats, Gold-breasted (Zebra) Waxbills, and a pair each of Diamond Doves, or some other small species (peaceful), and some small species of Quails; these two latter would give variety, and be a change from all the other Fluch-like birds.

Dullness in Small Finches.

Lanark.—If you had given an idea of what bird it was, I could have probably been more helpful, instead of treating it generally. Small Ornamental Finches have a bad habit of plucking at each other's feathers, and while they are so indulging themselves you think they are merely preening each other's plumage. So long as the birds remain in good plumage no harm seems to result, but once let a bird become a little bare, all the flock labour diligently to keep it so! The only remedy is to cage each bird so affected up separately. See that they get a daily bath, once a week put a little Dinneford's Magnesia in their drinking water, give them a liberal diet of white millet, and canary seed, also keep a millet spray in their cage, supply a little ripe fruit if they will take it, and if you can, obtain blightly foliage, let them have a spray daily from any non-poisonous plant or bush; supply grass in flower (seeding grass) liberally as green-food. If the skin appear dry and hard on the bald parts, rub in a little clean vaseline, but not sufficient to make the plumage greasy. On no account return them into the mixed company again till they are in full plumage. If you suspect lice, then wash them in quassia solution; this can be done by holding them gently but firmly in the hand, and well soak their plumage; use a mop camel-hair brush.

Songsters or Otherwise?

St. Quintin.—You simply say: Hardy enough to be kept out of doors. This gives me no clue as to how you intend to keep them, and this makes a definite reply rather difficult. In a roomy garden aviary they can be kept out of doors all the year. In cages they must only be hung out in genial weather, and then not in a draughty situation. They can be kept either singly or in pairs. Madagascar Weavers can make a noise, but I should never call it a songster; it is so screechy, but once at the Zoo, while several of these birds were setting my "teeth on edge," a lady and two boys were looking on, and they exclaimed, "Can't they sing?" I kept my thoughts to myself! Green and Grey Singing Finches are good songsters, and their notes are very [illegible] Red Tiger Finch (Common Avadavat) is a merry little fellow, with a sweet little voice, which he is very fond of using, and if his little lay is not very varied, he makes up for that by repetition; nevertheless it is not monotonous, and their cheery vivacious demeanour soon endear them to their owners.

Foreign Bird Queriists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Brevities.

Cockatiel not Incubating (M.V.).—Try the hen with another clutch, and if she still refuses to do her share of incubation, there is nothing to do but get rid of her and get another hen, but some hens of this species are very erratic with their first nests, and settle down all-right afterwards. You would find "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" very helpful.—See advert. in this column.

What Birds for Aviary? (W.T.S).—I really cannot give you a satisfactory reply without I know whether it is indoors or out, and some idea as to its construction. Please give me these particulars, and I can then really help you. If when you see this you send a letter to me through the Editor of this paper, I will with pleasure reply per post, so as to save you loss of time.

Crossing Sparrow with Canary (Curious).—It is rather an improbable cross; nevertheless, I have seen so many improbables succeed that I never use the word impossible. Being rather a small species will make your success the more probable. I should secure a robust Norwich hen for the purpose, and the usual Canary diet should suffice for both birds. I should certainly consider it worth the trial, but as you know, the element of luck enters largely into all hybrid breeding.

Virginian Cardinal (E.M.K.).—I expect this bird will much improve in depth of hue at the next moult, as it is evident he was in anything but a robust condition when he last moulted. Diet: Canary and millet two parts each, oats and sunflower seed one part each; well mix, and this will suffice for its seed mixture; also continue your present soft-food; supply ripe fruit ad lib; lettuce is appreciated as green-food, and live insects, now these are plentiful; do not depend upon mealworms, but give cockroaches, beetles, smooth caterpillars, spiders; in fact, almost any garden pests you can capture. He should by the time moult comes round be in a very healthy and vigorous state, and moult out a good colour.

With Budgerigars and Cockatiels (B.H.S.).—It is unsafe to keep Parrakeets and Finches together as a rule, but I think the Cardinals will be able to take care of themselves. Am not allowed to give names of individual dealers, but if you either watch the adverts. or insert one yourself, your requirements will be soon met. I think Red-rump and Many-colour Parrakeets would suit you as well as any. Both species are larger than Cockatiels, and the Many-colours are the smaller of the two. You could also keep a pair of Red Rosella Parrakeets. I have found these very suitable with other species, but they are practically double the size of Cockatiels. You could also keep Black-cheek, Madagascar, and Blue-wing Lovebirds in your aviary—you have room for all.

Food for Songster (Alice).—A mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as a staple. In addition, give separately twice a week half a teaspoonful of a mixture two parts each hemp, inga, black rape, and teazle, and one part each maw, gold of pleasure and millet. Give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar once a week, or a few crumbs of sponge cake, or plain crushed biscuit, or ordinary egg food. You may give these last-named in rotation, one each week, to make more variety. Give a little green daily in summer, and in winter when this is not fit for use substitute a little fruit or raw carrot.

Long-tailed Glossy Starlings (A.J.C.P.).—More than one species of Glossy Starling has been bred in captivity, and if you have a pair of this handsome species I should certainly give them an opportunity of doing so. As regards Blue-bonnet Parrakeets and other species, too, for that matter, if you have a true pair they should certainly settle down and breed in such an enclosure, but all Parrakeet breeders are compelled to admit that mostly they take a "cussed" long time to think about it, and patience is often severely tried. There is no reason why the Cuban Finches should not breed in the same aviary as Diamond Finches, but here again I must confess that very small success has come the way of those who have attempted to breed this species; this, however, only acts as an inducement for greater effort. Many thanks for appreciative remarks.

Budgerigars not Breeding (P.R.J.).—You cannot improve on the diet given in your booklet, but at this period of the year, when it is plentiful, give them as much seeding (flowering) grass as they will eat. In addition to this Canary and white millet seed, also millet sprays, and a few oats are all that they require. Also keep them supplied with water, grit and cuttlefish. Apart from this, you can only exercise patience; they will, I should say, settle down and breed before the year is out—they practically breed all the year round, except when moulting. Keep them in a light and airy position, not a draughty one, nor yet a hot one. I think you can safely leave them to themselves as to husk choosing; they will chase each other, but once they settle down much of this will disappear.

What Bird? ("Talking Bird.").—It is simply barbarous cruelty to cut birds' tongues, and it will not increase their talking capacity one iota. The only method is to first tame it, then keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also teach them by the constant repetition of short phrases or single words; it is best to keep on one till it is learned, and not run through a number at once. As to whether they are a talking species or what they are I cannot attempt to say till you describe their size, colouration, etc.

An Aged Cockatoo (Cinder).—It is by no means unusual for a Cockatoo to visit the coal vase and chew up a piece occasionally; in fact, almost daily, and I don't anticipate any harm from yours taking a little cinder. All Cockatoos, while in full health and vigour, have the powdery bloom in or on their feathers—it is natural to them. Now the time for genial weather has come, I should spray this bird frequently, that is every two or three days, with tepid water, and keep it out of draught till dry. While it will take no harm from chewing up a little cinder, I should not permit it to have access to same ad lib. Many thanks for your good wishes.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

F.J.W.S.—Your birds are, and have for a long time been, suffering from a contagious disease, or bacterial disease, the contagious element being taken in during the act of feeding, food or water possibly becoming contaminated by the excreta of diseased birds. The trouble you say has been existing for a very long time; this I can quite understand, for the longer its continuance, the more severe becomes the disease, owing to the microbe gaining in virulency whilst undergoing passage from bird to bird. You will, of course, understand what I mean by the word "contagious"; it does not carry the same meaning as "infectious," the latter indicating that the causal microbe is carried in the air, and the former that actual contact by direct or indirect means is its mode of spreading, although at the same time many infectious diseases are similarly contagious. The bird you sent me was rapidly undergoing decomposition. The bowels were badly inflamed, the lungs were both similarly affected, and there were hæmorrhages on the surface of the brain—all symptoms indicative of contagious disease. You must look upon your aviary as a diseased area, and introduce no more birds into it until you have remedied the present evil; disinfection must be thorough and complete, at the same time removing a layer of the earth flooring. If possible, remove your birds to another aviary, or temporary place until the other is rendered habitable. It is difficult for me to prescribe for you without knowing the number of remaining birds; if you will do this, I will at once help you.

W. A. Broadley.—Death in the case of Yorkshire hen was accidental, due to the obstruction in the oviduct, with consequent rupture of a perfectly-formed egg, the contents of which had escaped into the body cavity. This was not a post mortem accident, for the surrounding tissues gave evidence of this having existed previously. From the history of your prior losses, I should conclude you have contagious disease amongst your birds. The death of the hen is but a coincidence, and has no connection whatever with your other losses.

Mrs. Cottrell-Dormer.—The Chinese Painted hen Quail died of double pneumonia. In all other respects it was quite healthy, nor was there any evidence of anything pointing to contagion. The recent variation in temperature due to sudden weather changes, is quite sufficient to bring about this affection.

T.H.—Your birds are suffering from a contagious disease of microbic origin. The cock Canary you sent me had an enlarged, fatty liver, inflammation of the proventriculus (true stomach), and in part the bowels. There were also hæmorrhages on the surface of the liver, and the spleen was enlarged. Each symptom is a part of a contagious disease, and is possibly an auto-infection, as in the case of "F.J.W.S.," which read. Have you introduced any fresh birds lately into your bird room? I should like to know a little more detail. Your diet I can find no fault with, nor is the disease, in my opinion, a dietetic one, but due to contagion only.

W.S.L. ("B'ham.").—No, it is not necessarily a bad sign in young birds, but would prove suspicious in adults. No need to apologise for lengthy report: it is often a considerable help in the elucidation of disease. Your method of feeding is good, and leaves nothing to be desired. Your birds are very forward, and reflect great credit on a beginner. The young Canary was, if anything, a little too robust, and doing perhaps a little too well. Death arose from cerebral hæmorrhage, evidenced by a large blood clot on the brain, probably induced by sudden fright or undue excitement, and was unavoidable. As you are again continuing the egg food, it would be a good plan to give the magnesia a little more frequently. Keep your young birds in a warm place, and free from draughts, as the present windy weather is very trying for them.

R. F. Wilton.—The young cock Canary died of acute pneumonia, induced by the present spell of cold, windy and damp weather. You need not feel alarmed, for there is nothing infectious. The present weather is most critical for young birds, even though well housed. You must keep your remaining birds warm, and feed liberally until the weather becomes settled. Should you have another ill from same cause, at once place it in the warm for a few days; artificial heat is very beneficial in such cases.

Richard Anderton.—Death arose from apoplexy or a congested state of the lungs, with hæmorrhage and consequent collapse from loss of blood. It sometimes occurs in healthy, robust birds, cock birds particularly, as in this case, and death in a manner is accidental. The same thing might have occurred even under its owner's care, so that you need feel no anxiety on this account. He gave every appearance of having been well fed, and properly kept. Excitement or sudden fright is occasionally accountable, but I have known it often occur irrespective of such causes.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Mealworm Breeding (H. E. Rose, S. H. Love, Ilex, etc.).—We are this week reprinting Mr. Houlton's advice upon mealworm breeding, and no doubt in it you will find all the information you need.

Illustrated Ideas (F. A. Phillips, E. Binding).—We will inquire whether our artist has your "ideas" waiting their turn. (G. V. Souter).—We have given a very similar idea before. (E. Harrison).—We are afraid that the average fancier would find it beyond his powers to make this.

Sketches (H. Dawson).—Thanks; will see what we can do to illustrate this ingenious arrangement.

A Suggestion (G. R. Ashman).—We are very much indebted to you for this excellent suggestion, which shall be carried into effect.

A Leeds Contest (Vox Populi).—It has always been against our rules to publish criticism of judge's decisions where no dishonest motive for them is alleged; and you say that you do not wish to impute any. Judging is in any case only the expression of a personal opinion; further, the judge is the final arbiter, and no amount of letter writing can affect the situation once his awards have been made.

Illustrations of Parrots (Pierre).—"Illustrations of the Family of Psittacidæ," by Lear, was published in 1832, so your only chance of getting a copy would seem to be through the dealers in old or secondhand books. The author was a painter, and his plates have been much praised for their fidelity to nature and artistry. Probably the price of the work is high.

Correspondence.

Two Chicks from One Egg.

SIR,—I should like to know if any of your readers have had two birds hatch from one egg? I may say that I have had three eggs this year with two chicks in each egg. None of them have got away from the shell, having apparently died the day before hatching. If possible, I should like a reader to let me know the reason of this through the medium of your valuable paper, from which I have gathered much useful information.

C. W. LILL.

How are Close and Compact Tails Obtained?

SIR,—I have been keeping birds for the last 12 years as a hobby, and for the last two years I have gone in for showing or exhibiting (Border fancies). I started exhibiting publicly last year, and after going to the show, I was disappointed to see the tails of my birds lacking very much, being too wide as compared with the winners. The tails of the winners were close and compact. I have tried hard to get the tails of my birds the same, but I have failed. As a novice, I shall be immensely obliged if any fancier will kindly help me. How can I get the tails of the birds close and compact?

NOVICE.

Experiences of Canary Breeding.

SIR,—The "Jeromo" pattern breeding cage, as far as my experience goes, is one of the best for the purpose of breeding Canaries. Being open wired, it is easily kept clean, the birds get plenty of air, and to protect them from too strong a light, I have found it a good plan to hang a linen cloth over one end of the cage and let it extend along the front and back as far as the board which forms the nursery, so that it is not too dark, and the hen sits in comfort in subdued light. Then the upper side doors enable a small, well-sanded tin tray (the lid of a box answers admirably for the purpose) to be placed under the nest each morning, and this without frightening the young, so that they are easily kept clean; and as I have two trays for each cage, I am also able to give the birds a clean floor with the greatest expedition and ease, and it avoids being too long near the cage or disturbing the hen. This I do twice a week during the breeding season. I am an advocate for the wire-frame nests, which I line with felt, and since using them, have had no trouble with red mite. The board which forms the floor of the nursery is, I consider, one of the great advantages of the "Jerome" cage, as, should any young be thrown out of the nest, they cannot fall far, consequently are less liable to be injured, and they can easily hop to it when first leaving the nest. When the breeding season is over, it can readily be removed and the cage used as a flight. Last year, with two pairs of birds, I reared twenty healthy young, only allowing the old birds three nests each. All moulted well and were in splendid condition through the winter. Before closing, I will add, they were reared on Hartz Mountain bread, with fresh groundsel three or four times a day, and, of course, the usual seed. Trusting my experiences may be useful.

The Hand-rearing of Hawfinches

SIR,—I read with interest "Salopian's" letter in your issue of May 14 respecting the hand-rearing of Hawfinches; and I have been awaiting a reply from one of your numerous readers. As, however, none seems to be forthcoming, I venture to draw "Salopian's" attention to the fact that in the issue of CAGE BIRDS dated May 2, 1908, there appears an article upon the Hawfinch, by Mr. S. Hakes, which I have found to be very useful. Perhaps, sir, you may see your way to reprint that part of it which deals with the hand-rearing of the species; I feel sure your correspondent will find it very useful and a sufficient answer to his questions.

——— JAS. POWNEY.

The section of the article referred to we have pleasure in reprinting. It is as follows:—

"Take the young Hawfinches when 11 days old. If you find them older, and they scuttle out of the nest, go to where they are seen to drop, and you will discover them in a sitting position with their mouths open. They will not move for hours from the spot where they drop. Now you have got them, get them home the best way you can, perhaps in a camera box, which makes a splendid disguise when nesting. I will give now my method of hand-rearing, which has never failed me for 20 years. To make the food, take 1lb. of hemp seed and 1lb. of Canary seed, and crush separately in a mortar. Next sieve the husks out, and you have about a pound and a half of meal; mix together and put in a tin. Now boil ½ pint of new milk and ½ pint stale breadcrumbs and beat up well. Add two ounces of the above seed, ½ ounce oatmeal, one ounce of hard-boiled egg, ½ ounce peaflower, and mix well together. If a little too stiff, thin it with water. Mix quantity of food, according to number of birds you have. Keep it in a cool place, and mix fresh every day. Give three bits each about every hour. Start early in the morning, and slacken off in the middle of the day, then giving the same quantity every two hours. When the young birds are starting to fly, give crushed hemp seed, mixed Parrot food crushed, and don't forget green peas, but don't overdo them at first, or inflammation will follow. If so, give crushed hemp, and Indian wheat steeped in milk. Keep on this diet for about three days, and give milk to drink until the droppings are firm again. Then take care, and look at the cage bottom every night to see they are not scoured. When they are reared and flying about, fanciers will call round to have a look at them. In selecting cocks from hens, the cocks have plenty of yellow on the breast and are black on the short flight feathers; the hens are striped yellow on breasts, and pale blue on short flights."

A Recipe for a Washable Distemper.

SIR,—Being a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, I have been interested recently in the correspondence regarding a washable distemper. I noticed in your last issue that Mr. Robins mentioned "Walpamur" as a distemper which could be varnished. If this preparation was better known among bird fanciers I think it would be much more extensively used. I have used it for the inside of my own breeding cages, and can say from experience that it will stand any amount of hot water and soap without peeling off, whether varnished or not. It is the best preparation I have come across. As regards expense, it is put up in 7lb. tins at 2s. 6d. each, but it can be procured in lesser quantities from any oil stores where it is in regular use. It is considerably cheaper than enamel; it goes further, and is non-poisonous.

Stockton Heath and District O.S.

SIR.—At a meeting held May 22nd, it was resolved to convene a special general meeting of members of the Stockton Heath and Dis. O.S., to be held on Thursday, June 9th [see Club Notices in this issue]. It was decided that Mr. J. Bretherton be elected secretary. The Fancy in this district is in a rapidly growing condition, and we make a special appeal to all who have not yet joined us to do so at once. We are now arranging for the first feather shows; also drawing up a special agenda for meeting nights. Our Society is open to all, and the secretary will be pleased to furnish particulars. It was also decided that Mr. T. F. Moss be elected chairman. We have a good list of members and patrons, so we are going to make things "hum" a bit up here. We finished up last year very satisfactorily. Will fanciers please make a note of the meeting?

A Green Border Section for the Green Canary Association.

SIR,—At a well-attended meeting held on May 26th, and called to discuss the above question, it was decided to accept the Green Borders; and this variety having been taken into the Association, it is hoped that fanciers and exhibitors will come forward from all parts of the country and join the Association, which has for its object the advancement of the Green Canary. A silver cup will be offered for competition throughout the coming show season, together with cash specials, and a gold medal. It is also probable that other specials will be provided. It only remains to be said that no stone will be left unturned in an endeavour to make a success of the undertaking. The annual subscription is only 2s. 6d., and the secretary will be pleased to receive the names of applicants for membership between now and June 22nd, so that they can be brought up at the June meeting; together with any suggestions tending to benefit the variety. What is required is a good send off. Lovers of the "wee gem" have now a splendid opportunity of popularising their favourites. Grasp this opportunity with both hands, and its success is assured. Societies willing to put classes on at their shows should make application to the secretary, and same will receive every consideration. List closes July 16th. Secretaries please note. A meeting will shortly be held to arrange the details, and the result will be announced through CAGE BIRDS.

The Type of the Lancashire Canary.

SIR,—It was with surprise on reading the discussion on the above in last week's issue that I noticed Mr. Oldham's statement that my bird was disqualified at Middleton Show in December. I must admit that it was at the bottom of the class, receiving only hc, but when it comes to saying that it was disqualified, I think it time I wrote and said that up to the present time I have never had an exhibit disqualified, and I think I have shown and won more than any Lancashire exhibitor these last two or three years. I did not intend to write at all on this question, as to me it seems a waste of time, because not one of the writers of the letters on the above subject has enlightened anyone, as we are where we were when it started. They seem to lose sight of the fact that others have won with the same type of bird at both Rochdale Shows, Manchester, Nottingham, etc. But perhaps they will look round next season at them all, and that they will find them I am certain. I shall not reply to any of the letters till I see that the writers know what they are writing about, and have the courage to mention that I am not the only one by half-a-dozen who has been "on the bench" with these birds this last season.

WM. ADAMS.

P.S.—Since writing the above letter I have found my catalogue of Middleton Show, which I enclose to you to prove that I am correct in my statement as regards any disqualification of the bird in question, which was in the members' section, class 17 (Lancs., Coppy, any variety), and was No. 1, and stood at the bottom with a "highly commended" card.—W.A.

SIR,—I am sure most of your readers are of opinion that Mr. Fuller has missed his avocation. Just fancy what a price he could have commanded if he had hired himself to one of the political parties to tour the country with a van! I have known Ted Fuller for many years as a hard hitter, and one who does not mind receiving a hard knock from anyone who will come in front. He was not trained in that school which teaches that speech was given to man to hide his thoughts. I am not an apologist for Mr. Fuller, and I hold no brief for him. I am inclined to think he would be a client hard to keep in hand. In this discussion there has been a lot said which might have been left out, perhaps; but no harm has been done. It appears to me Mr. Fuller's intention when writing to you was to draw attention to birds not of the true Lancashire type being placed in the money at important shows, and mentioned one bird in particular, and two capable judges. I did not notice that his letter challenged the capabilities of either of the judges; I think the opposite. But he thought the judges had made a mistake in that particular instance. The owner of the bird had stated the same. My name has been mentioned more than once during the controversy about the type of the Lancashire, and two standards have been published side by side, giving the points allotted for special properties in the bird. The first standard is the one I made, and does not differ very much from the second or later one drawn up by a committee. In the original standard five points were given for wings meeting at tips; that was to encourage a good wing carriage. Five points went for quality of feather. The Lancashire has a type of feather differing from other Canaries, and five points were allowed for colour. A brighter coloured Canary looks better than a dull one, and a Lancashire, clear or slightly ticked, is better than a variegated one. The new standard knocked off all the points I have mentioned, and allows a Lancashire with very badly crossed wings to be as good as another with the best of wings. Quality of feather is ignored, and colour has gone. I am not discussing the advisability, or wisdom, of altering the standard; I only mention it in order to draw attention to what has become of the points or marks taken away for those qualities. Out of a total of 100 points I gave 25 to head, or coppy; 20 marks for length of bird, and 10 for upstanding position. The newer standard say 30 points for head, or coppy; 25 for length and substance, with 15 marks for upstanding position and type. I had originally put down 25 points for length, but when the draft copy of the standard was placed before the members it was suggested that too much stress should not be placed on the length and size of the bird at that time, as it would discourage many a younger breeder who had not got hold of the big ones; and our late friend, Mr. Stanley Robinson, moved a reduction of the number of the points for the reason stated. The present standard having gone five points better for coppy, the same for length and substance and upstanding position, one would conclude that a bird to win should excel more than ever in the particular properties that the Association has seen fit to further emphasize as the special characteristics which distinguish the Lancashire Canary. Was Mr. Fuller wrong when he drew attention to a certain bird winning that could not score by those properties the specialist club had said a winner should possess? During the discussion we have read about some persons speaking or writing about the Lancashire Canary who have little experience as successful breeders and exhibitors. There is not much in an argument of that kind in a newspaper controversy. Breeding is more or less of a lottery; accommodations and circumstances of environment in various ways conduce to or tell against successful rearing for exhibition. One person possesses better powers of observation than another, and can more quickly note points and properties about birds and animals. It does not necessarily follow that because a person is old in the Fancy he can judge birds better than a younger fancier. The older one has the advantage of experience; and if he has made use of his opportunities he should know more and judge better. I have digressed from the subject only to draw the attention of correspondents to the fact that there is no argument here, nor any need for reference to the length of time a man may have been a breeder and exhibitor, whether successful or not. I have had some experience as a breeder, exhibitor, reporter, and judge of Lancashires, and know the difficulties surrounding all the departments. Judging is the most trying of all of them, if done conscientiously. I notice a remark of Mr. Garner's to the effect that a judge cannot follow rules; this remark seems to startle Mr. Oldham. In forty years' experience of attending shows of various kinds I have never yet seen the judges engaged with pencil and paper figuring up points—allowing so many for this and knocking off a number for that. The standard at its best is only to act as a guide to which the judge must pay attention. To argue, as some do sometimes, that a judge must follow a hard and fast rule and a set of figures is wrong. It would not do in practice. I remember Mr. Jos. Bexson, one of the best judges, being faced with a bird deformed and crippled on one foot. He put it up. Someone grumbled about this and said it ought never to have had a card. Joe answered that if the bird had no foot at all it was the best Lancashire in the class, and asked what the standard said about a crippled foot. No man can judge Lancashires just according to a written standard. That Lancashires are improving there should be no doubt in anyone's mind. Some think otherwise, but they are like the old soldiers who fight their battles over again for the entertainment of the company over pint pots. They did fight in those days, and they did breed Lancashires. The judg[illegible] it was, and there are quite as many capable of judging and every bit as honest. We are getting a more level type of Lancashire. The Crest properties are disappearing, and nothing does more to help in driving it off the Lancashire show bench than a good heated discussion such as the one we have been having lately; it will remind all who judge Lancashires that the two associations that specialise in Lancashires are determined to keep the type to what it should be, and any judge who gets far away from it must expect to hear from somebody. Exhibitors will pardon me for putting in a word for the judge. I have said the judge cannot follow a hard and fast rule, but will be guided by the standard. A judge is compelled by the nature of his office to give his awards, and in coming to conclusions he has many more things and points to weigh up than most exhibitors seem to be aware of. A bird may have a perfect coppy and have length and substance. These two properties carry more than half of the whole points. The bird might be entirely out of condition and very dirty, yet, according to rule, only 10 points could be knocked off for those faults. However well a judge knew the standard, he would hardly put such a bird in the money under any circumstances. Another exhibit may have all the good points except a roughness behind the coppy. For that roughness someone would say the bird should be put down. I would not discard the bird for that fault alone. The fact of its having the Lancashire body, feather, and position as it stood on the perch would be conclusive proof to me that there was not much Crest blood showing in such a specimen. I know too well how the roughness can be produced behind the coppy, and how easy it is to conclude that every bird that does not possess the proper one has been bred from Crests. You published a good plate of Lancashires some time ago. Space will not allow me to touch the Lizard question at present, but I have not forgotten some of the points that have been mentioned, and may find time with your permission to put in a bit for the spangled ones.

Hen which Bite Off Young Birds' Toes.

SIR,—As I am a lover of birds I have tried my hand at breeding, but with bad results considering my last year's success, I am only able to manage one pair, as I have no time to attend to more. Well, the hen laid and hatched four fine youngsters, but to my grief five days later I found all the young birds' toes were bitten off. Is this a rare case? I should like to hear from any other fanciers whether they have experienced the same.

The Battersea Open C.B.A. Show.

SIR,—Allow me to thank "Visitor" and "Dark Mule" for their kind wishes and promises for our future shows. I am sure Mr. Easterling will do his best in the matter. Although we welcome any correspondence on the point raised by "Visitor," I am sorry to see the only too frequently adopted method of wandering away from the point at issue. "Other Societies" and "sight influence" are out of the question. I hope "Visitor" will be rewarded by first prize, and I also hope "Dark Mule" will moult out a better specimen, and take a first and special at Battersea's next show.

W. J. HONEYSETT.
Chairman, Battersea Open C.B.A.

Green Food or No Green Food?

SIR,—Could any fancier tell me if it would be safe in the breeding of Canaries and Mules, when the old birds are feeding young, to give no green food at all, only seed and egg food? I had a pair of Norwich Canaries last year; they hatched two young ones, and when these were three days old they had a little chickweed given to them twice a day. Young died when about a week old. The old birds gave them too much green food, till the poor little things fairly burst open; they hardly got any egg food.

ERNEST FOLKARD.

[It may interest Mr. Folkard to know that one of my own hens (a 1909 Norwich Plainhead) is at this moment rearing young without any green food, which she leaves absolutely untouched, using only egg food and seed. This is the first case of its kind to come to my notice. The young are fat, healthy, and on the point of leaving the nest. I have, on the other hand, had many hens successfully rear fine broods on little else but seeding green food (chickweed, shepherd's-purse, etc.). —Editor.]

Proposed New Open Cage Bird Association for Glasgow.

SIR,—Re Mr. Bowman's letter in your last week's issue, I noticed an item: "To avoid clashing with any other club's date it was finally decided to hold a show on Friday and Saturday, January 13th and 14th, 1911"; and after I read the contents of the letter I thought that those fanciers who were present at the meeting were very much absent-minded to say that they couldn't keep mind of one of the last, but not the least, Bathgate, which has been held on that same date for the last five years, when I was first appointed secretary.

R. BALD,
Secretary, Bathgate and Dist. C.B.S.

SIR,—A general meeting of fanciers interested in the new Association (the Glasgow and District C.B.A.) will be held on Tuesday next, June 7th, in the Co-operative Hall, Glasgow Cross, at 8 p.m. Business: Rules, classification, etc. Membership cards will be on sale at the meeting, or may be had at any time, from the secretary or members of committee. A good attendance is requested.

Proposed Specialist Norwich Canary Club in the North.

SIR,—I noticed in CAGE BIRDS last week a letter by Mr. Curry re the formation of a Specialist Club for Norwich in the North. I should be glad if you would allow me to point out that I do not consider there is any necessity for the suggested club, as the Norwich Plainhead Club (of which I am secretary) is open for any Northern fancier to join, and was formed with the intention of its being the Specialist Club for Norwich Plainhead breeders in every part of the United Kingdom. The Norwich Plainhead Club caters as well for the Northern fancier as for the Midland fancier, but I am sorry to say that for some reason or other we have not many members in the North, although we have granted our patronage to shows in their district; and about 12 months ago (when the Northern Norwich Plainhead Club was disbanded) I wrote to as many Northern Norwich fanciers as I could get on the track of, and asked them to join the N.P.C., but with very poor results. Personally, I do not think that the suggested club would be a success, as in my opinion it is an impossibility to run a Specialist Club and give decent specials on a subscription of 2s. 6d. per annum, unless there are a large number of members, more, I think, than would join the suggested club. My only object in writing this letter is to suggest that instead of forming a new club Mr. Curry and the other gentlemen who have approached him, together with every other Norwich Plainhead fancier in the North, should join the N.P.C., and so strengthen and uphold the old club, and I have no hesitation in saying that if they do this they will not regret it, as they will get more satisfaction and greater benefits than they will by proceeding with the suggested new club. We have, I can safely say, one of the best lists of specials it is possible to have, and we cater equally as well for the amateur as for the champion. On behalf of the N.P.C., therefore, I offer a hearty welcome to every Norwich breeder, no matter in what part of the country he resides, and shall only be too pleased to send him full particulars.

The Breeding of "Mules" from Mules.

SIR,—In your issue of April 30 a correspondent stated that he had bred some Mules from a Mule Linnet. I am very pleased to hear it. I have myself bred some Mules from a Mule. I have a Goldfinch-Canary hen, which would not breed with a Canary. I tried a Linnet with her with which she paired up. She had two eggs, and both came off on May 13, and they are getting on all right. But I had to take the Linnet away on account of his being so cruel to the young. Now they are both getting on all right with the hen. If any of your readers living anywhere near me wish to see my birds and will write and let me know, I will make arrangements with them.

A New Society for Chopwell and District.

SIR,—A meeting was held on May 28th to form the Chopwell and District Fanciers' Society for Cage Birds, etc. J. English, Esq., was asked and consented to become President of the Society; Mr. H. Griffiths, chairman; Mr. W. Carr, treasurer; and Mr. J Brown, 12, Humber Street, Chopwell, Ebchester, R.S.O., Co. Durham, secretary. It was moved and seconded that we hold our first show on October 8th. Moved and seconded that the subscription be 2s. 6d. per year. I might say that we have got the football pavilion free of charge in which to hold our meetings. We have started our society with fifteen members and ten vice-presidents. Will all fanciers and those interested in the new society kindly attend the next meeting, to be held in football pavilion on Saturday, June 11th? All communications and enquiries to be made to me.

Bird Life in Peckham Rye Park.

SIR,—May I advise any of your readers who have not already done so, to take an early opportunity of having a walk round Peckham Rye Park. During the last few years I have visited most of the parks in London, but I do not think there is one which can compare with Peckham for its wealth of bird life. The ground on which this park is situated is heavily timbered, and was for many years private property. Since the park has been laid out a lot of alterations have been made, but a large proportion has been left in its natural state and forms an ideal home for the birds. In the early morning especially the park is full of song, and to anyone who knows where to look for them, a large variety of British birds can be seen. I recently had an opportunity of walking through the park early one morning. After crossing the Rye I entered by the gate opposite the bandstand. This brings us to the lake, where a large number of ducks, etc., are taking their morning dip. I noticed a large number of youngsters, some evidently only recently hatched, who, despite the cold and wet weather, seemed strong and healthy. Leaving the lake on the left, I entered a path where the ground has been left in its natural state. The wild parsley was a mass of bloom, and the trees, which are very thick here, were covered with blossom. Lilac, hawthorn, and chestnuts made a fine show, and the place teemed with bird life. Blackbirds and Thrushes could be seen by the dozen, and the song of the Linnet and Chaffinch could be heard in all directions. Several Robins were hopping about, and the Wood Pigeons were busy on the tops of the trees. Two stately Peacocks crossed the path further along, and at another place a pair of Golden Pheasants were after breakfast. The Moorhens seem to prefer the grass to the water, as they can be seen a considerable distance from the lake. The humble Sparrow is naturally very much to the fore, and his impudence in snatching the bread thrown to the ducks is most amusing. Altogether a walk round is most instructing, and to anyone interested in birds forms a very pleasant morning's recreation.

S. STEPHENS.

Egg-laying Records of Bullfinch Hens.

SIR,—Would you be kind enough to ask your advisory expert on British birds, Mr. G. E. Weston, if he will state a few records of the laying qualities of Bullfinches while in captivity. I myself had the unfortunate "luck" to have a Bullie hen laying 43 eggs in one year, and 34 the following year. Afterwards it died from sheer exhaustion. While last year I had another Bullie hen lay 32 eggs, and she died also. Of course, such laying qualities as these are held to be out of the question by some of the old experts in this district (Bathgate), and that is the reason I am asking you, sir, to state a few such egg-laying records which other fanciers have had from the same species of bird.

WM. SHARP.

(My own "record" is held by a British hen Bullie, which laid in one season 29 eggs; she commenced with two regular clutches of five eggs each, then laid almost daily on the cage floor until she had presented me with the aforementioned number. Her greatest unbroken run (one egg daily) was seven. She was paired to a cock Siskin; all the eggs were unfertile. This hen failed to survive the moult. I have had a hen Bullie lay nine eggs on nine successive days (a Siberian). I see no reason to question Mr. Sharp's figures; indeed, I have heard of hen Bullies exceeding fifty eggs in a season, but cannot vouch for the accuracy of the statement. Perhaps other readers will give their experiences.—G. E. WESTON.)

The Future of the Cage Bird Union.

What is it to be?

SIR,—When Mr. MacPartling tells the Newcastle Society how many were present at the executive meeting, which decided their case versus Lister, I will give him a full reply to his letter. Meanwhile, mutual recriminations can do no good either to the writers or to the cause of reconstructing the Union, which your correspondents seem to have forgotten in the hope of covering up its past misdeeds and omissions.

THOS. C. CRAWHALL.

SIR,—As a recommendation for the strengthening of the Cage Bird Union, I believe a central Council to be necessary to give that adhesiveness required in a large and scattered body. Let the local societies around the headquarters of the Union (at present in Manchester) collectively elect six fanciers to form this body, nominations to be sent to the general secretary (within 30 days), who shall then send a list of the names to the elective societies to choose therefrom the six required Councilmen, such candidates as do not receive a clear majority over all the others to be re-voted on. Possibly the election can be accomplished in less than thirty days. To this Council the representatives shall be elected from the several districts as at present, the chairman or secretary (who may not be the representative) to attend Council meeting as substitute in the interests of such district when the representative cannot be present. The local Councilmen to meet fortnightly to advise the secretary and forward the interests of the Union.

G. W. MACPARTLING.

A Northern Federation.

SIR,—I must protest against Mr. Robson's misrepresentations in his letter of this week re the above matter. I did not ask anyone to stand for secretary of the Northern Federation, but I did ask Mr. Storey if, in the event of a Northern Federation being formed, he would be willing to act in that capacity, as I had been approached by Mr. Thos. Taylor, secretary of Gateshead C.B.S., as to the advisability of forming one. I stated then, as I did at the Newcastle Commitee meeting, that I did not think it possible to work one, but if it was the general wish for one I would give it all the help I could. I also stated my opinion as to what it should do to be a success; but I saw so many difficulties ahead that I could not advise it. My only object in proposing a general meeting of all Northern fanciers was that if it had to be formed to do any good this coming show season, it should be done at once and not left until too late to get it into working order. Mr. Robson does not say that I asked Mr. Brunskill to act as secretary, yet from the wording of his letter that inference has been taken as his meaning by some people; such an absurd notion never entered my head. Darlington is no centre for the Tyne and district. I am not the originator of the idea. Mr. Hutchinson proposed, and Mr. Robson seconded, an amendment (which was carried) at a meeting previous to my taking office re a circular letter to Northern societies, in which the following occurs: "If they decide to resign from the Union, then the question of establishing a Northern Union can be considered." Is that an answer to your question, Mr. Robson? Please do not try to misrepresent my views again, as over and over again I have said that I am not in favour of a Northern Union at present, though willing to help such an organisation if formed, which is very different to being anxious to form it. And please remember I am not playing cards, but am as anxious as you for the welfare of the Fancy, especially in this district. And also please remember I cannot admit a thing to be unjust and yet advise its acceptance on the plea of loyalty. I shall certainly —in the words of the Scottish bard—stand with my back to the rock and fight with all my strength the black hordes of unjustness, and I believe that they will quail before the light of publicity. All I ask is that when I am quoted I may not be misrepresented.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

SIR,—I regret to learn that Mr. MacPartling is under the impression that I have something rankling in my mind against him as the representative of No. 1 district, and why he should be under that impression I cannot understand. In my letters to CAGE BIRDS, I have only alluded to him once, and that was not in connection with No. 1 district, but in my remarks upon the constitution of the Executive Council. Even then his name was not mentioned, and as I said at the time, I certainly did not mean to be disrespectful towards him, but merely stated what were known facts. I can assure Mr. MacPartling that I have no animosity against him, for the simple reason that I have no cause for any. On the contrary, I think that some of his intimate friends could tell him that I have always given him credit for being upright and honourable in his actions, and my only cause for regret is that we cannot see eye to eye in regard to C.B.U. matters. If I had had anything against him in the sense that he implies, he would have heard about it before now, he can make quite sure of that. Mr. MacPartling says that he is wise enough to be aware that he knows very little, although he has been in touch with the Fancy for over twenty years. From what I have heard, sir, that fact is well known to many northern fanciers, and why Mr. MacPartling should farther exploit his own ignorance is quite beyond me. Would it not be much better if he were to take a few lessons, and Parrot-like, repeat them? Let him, for instance, learn that it appears rather ludicrous for him to write one letter complaining that no one has a good word for the "poor representative," and in the next one to be calling loudly, "Come one, come all, this rock shall fly, etc." Many fanciers, methinks, would go a long way to see Mr. MacPartling dressed in kilts, his back placed against a rock, with his arms full of C.B.U. rules, howling defiance at all opponents of the Cage Bird Union. Further let him learn that this correspondence was begun by the Editor, who invited the opinions of readers as to what causes were responsible for the dwindling away of the Cage Bird Union, and also suggestions for the strengthening of the Union. I gave my reasons, and apparently this has offended Mr. MacPartling. I also offered a suggestion which I thought would be good for the Fancy, and be the means of placing the Union upon a sound basis. Now, sir, instead of Mr. MacPartling indulging in mock heroics, let him bring forward a suggestion by means of which a Union could be formed that would be of real benefit to the Fancy; and I am sure that all fanciers will wish that the suggestion may bear fruit. Mr. MacPartling states (sarcastically) that I would have been an important addition to the committee of No. 1 district. It may interest Mr. MacPartling to know that I could, if I had wished, have represented my society on the District Committee for the last two or three years, and the only reason that I did not do so was through (as I told our members) not being quite in accord with the Union, for reasons well known, so I did not feel justified in taking any active part in it. On the other hand, sir, I might inform Mr. MacPartling that, although I have taken no active part in Union matters since the discussion took place in CAGE BIRDS three or four years ago, I have never (in the interval that has elapsed since that and the present discussion), either by word or deed, done anything that could be termed detrimental to the Union, and if Mr. MacPartling had been as consistent in his efforts to make the Union more popular as I have been in my endeavour to allow it a fair trial, perhaps a different tale would have to be told at the present time. Mr. MacPartling harps a great deal on men staying outside to ridicule and condemn the work of better men. There has been no need to ridicule and condemn the work of the Union. The Union has accomplished that for itself. Our object now should be to remove the causes and place the Union beyond ridicule and condemnation. Mr. MacPartling need not look to Sunderland to find the men who are trying to break the Union; there are none here, not even myself. He knows perfectly well that to find these men he must look nearer home. Sunderland fanciers have nothing whatever against the Union other than rule 22, and I have no hesitation in saying that many more societies are of our opinion. I firmly believe myself that, if that rule had never been in existence the Union would have been in a flourishing condition to-day, and although Mr. MacPartling once told me personally that the Union could not stand without the rule, I beg to differ with him. I would like it to be clearly understood that I am not in favour of a Northern Federation . With me it must be a National Union or nothing at all, and I quite agree with Mr. Tom Robson, that if a meeting of representatives of the Northern societies be called. it should be for the purpose of reconstructing the Union—in a proper manner, and on popular lines. In refcrence to Mr. Johnson's letter, he evidently, for obvious reasons, prefers to be humorous and sarcastic, rather than undertake the more difficult task of answering my question. I quite understand what he means in regard to Mr. Crawhall's case, and I quite agree with him as to the expressions one would have heard if Mr. Crawhall had escaped punishment. But, sir, doesn't all this go to prove that Mr. Crawhall was not punished solely for breaking the rule, but rather because he was at one time a strong supporter of the rule? It is clearly apparent from Mr. Johnson's argument, that, had Mr. Crawhall just been an ordinary member of the Union, instead of at one time being a red-hot enthusiast, he would not have been so severely punished for the offence that he committed. That is why I say he was treated harshly. Mr. Johnson thinks otherwise. However, as Mr. Johnson says, there is no need to fall out about it, and as it is simply a matter of opinion, we may as well, as he says, agree to differ. In regard to the other affair, I know quite well that many fanciers hold different opinions to Mr. Johnson's and mine as to whether Mr. Birchley was guilty (of staining, I mean) or not. But that has nothing to do with the question that arose out of Mr. Johnson's bringing this case into the discussion. The question now under discussion is that if a man paints a bird and sells it to a novice, and the novice exhibits it, who should be punished? Mr. Johnson says the novice should be punished, because he exhibited it. I say that the man who stains a bird and sells it to an exhibitor (novice or otherwise) as a genuine natural coloured bird, is the principal offender, whether he gives a guarantee or not, and he is the one who should be punished. And I want to know why he cannot be punished. Surely, sir, that is plain enough for Mr. Johnson. He stated in a previous letter that the Union couldn't get at the seller of the bird (he was presuming, of course, that he had stained it), because he hadn't exhibited it. But he has not yet told us why the fact of the man's not exhibiting the bird prevented the Union from "getting at him," according to the rule that I quoted in my last letter.

W. REID.

SIR,—I see Mr. Crawhall purposely ignores my letter in reply to his, as he considers writers under a nom de plume are generally not worthy of a reply. Let me tell him I am as particular about my character as he is, and that it was through being a novice writer that I claimed the privilege of the nom de plume. Mr. C., you threw the glove down for anyone to pick up, and it was not gentlemanly to shirk the fight when your challenge was accepted. The truth hits hard, Mr. C. Your ignoring of my letter does not alter the fact that the minority would not have received justice, or that you had set a bad example and was the first betrayer of the C.B.U. in the North. Your actions have borne much fruit. But why have you turned your coat and deserted us? You said after you were punished you were still in favour of the C.B.U. and would do your best for it. Is "doing your best" deserting and trying to start a Federation? The C.B.U. is not dead yet by any means, and its objects are the same as the Federation you are striving to get up. Mr. Robson hits hard when he says the C.B.U. failures in the North have been by local men. I expect they were the best the district could select, and if they cannot run the C.B.U. successfully with others to guide them, how can they run a Federation by themselves? Is comment necessary? You say others are being blamed for my letter; that is all right. Both the gentlemen you name know the writer, and everyone knows they sign their names, having confidence in their ability. I would like an explanation from Mr. Reid, who said on May 7th that he questioned very much if Mr. C. knew he was doing wrong when he made his entries, and then on May 21st he says he knew and told his sister it would be against the rules. It seems, Mr. Reid, as if you don't know what you are really writing about. On May 21st you are a wee bit off again; you say Mr. C. thought he would not be punished. How does this agree with Mr. C.'s statement that he was prepared to bear the punishment, if any, that the C.B.U. would mete out to him? There was no "unwitting mistake" there! Only Mr. C. got a bigger hiding for being a bad boy than he expected. Have the C.B.U. Executive no suggestions to make for the future? The future is being sadly left out; it seems to be all a wrangle about the past. Why not raise the subscription to 1s.? The present small sub. is not one earthly bit of use; it is like a drop in a bucket. I would suggest that of the 1s., 3d. go to the Executive and 9d. to the district; this would pay the district representatives' expenses and would leave a small balance which might buy cups, say, one for most points over the district shows for champions, and one, the same, for novices. Might not the C.B.U. arrange a district inter-club show for C.B.U. members, say, to be held in middle of January? Everyone then has his birds through the moult and all are in fine fettle. The club which gained most points to carry the title of club champions and to hold some trophy as a tangible expression of same. I am sure if a show of this kind was held, the clubs would present trophies for each section to still further add interest to the show; and as years rolled by I have no doubt that the fight would wax hot. Of course, members of more than one club would have to declare which club would count his points. Might not the C.B.U. arrange table shows on much the same lines? All this would strengthen the hands of the C.B.U. and promote a brotherly feeling between clubs, and would all be for the betterment of the Fancy. Could not the C.B.U. give medals or some small trophy as C.B.U. section specials, just to let people know the C.B.U. is alive? One thing more. As to the insurance scheme, might that not be brought more prominently before the members before the show season starts? I know nothing about it until the present crisis. Lastly, are the Executive asleep; is no one awake to defend their cause? Shame on you one and all to leave a cripple to fight for you.

It was no light task, as the running for honours was extremely close. While the judging was in progress Mr. G. Gardner made some very interesting remarks on "How to obtain colour," which were most useful and instructive, and were greatly appreciated. The following members were elected:—Messrs. Spencer, Evans, Hardiman, Smith, and Mrs. E. Hawes; and Mr. H. Hardcastle was nominated for membership. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. W. Shakespeare, thus closing a very pleasant evening.

LOUGHBOROUGH & DIS. C.B.A.

Meeting held May 25th, at the Chainwood Coffee House, Mr. F. J. Green in the chair. A good muster of members turned up. Arrangements were considered for the nest feather show, which will be held in July; the date will be finally settled upon at our next meeting on June 22. Members requiring colour food should send in their orders at once to the sec.—G. JEFFERY, Sec.

FALKIRK (Good Intent) C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held in the Oddfellows' Hall on May 28th, at 7.30, Mr. J. Hunter presiding. The business of the evening was deciding prize and special cards for first feather show, and the enrolling of five members. Owing to the secretary leaving the district, it was left to the Association to decide whether he should still hold the office of secretary, or not. It was moved and seconded that the secretary keep the appointment, and this was unanimously agreed to. His present address is 10, Bayne Street, Stirling.—W. CLUBB, Sec.

ECCLES AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At our meeting held on May 23, it was decided that the subscription be 1s.; entrance fee, 4s. per annum, with an open radius. The officers elected were as follows:—President, Mr. G. Wilson; chairman, Mr. J. Dawson; vice-chairman, Mr. Astley; secretary and treasurer, Mr. H. W. Jones; and a committee of five fanciers (pro tem.) to draw up rules for our next meeting on June 6th, at 8 p.m. prompt, at Patricroft Coffee Tavern, when we elect committee, etc. All fanciers are invited to give us a hearty send-off and a successful meeting.—H. W. JONES, Hon. Sec., 29, Parrin Lane, Monton.

CHESTERFIELD AND DIS. C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held May 21st, at headquarters, Queen's Head, Gleeman Gate. It was decided to hold a members' nest feather show on June 18th, at headquarters, classes as follows: four classes for Norwich, four for Yorkshires, one for any other var. Canary, one any variety Mule or Hybrid, a 7/6 selling class, one for any var. any age British adult, and one for Foreign (adult). All birds to be staged by 4 o'clock prompt; entry 6d. per cage, open to public at 5 o'clock. We shall be pleased to see any intending members. General meeting after show for open show business and admission of members.—CHAS. H. NAYLOR, Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

There was a good attendance of members and visitors at a meeting held on May 25th, to hear a paper by Mr. Edmunds, of Swindon, on "Foreign Bird Keeping, Starting, and Onward." The essayist, who proved himself as successful in the role of lecturer as he is keeping Foreign birds, gave a most interesting paper full of sound, practical advice. Starting from the time the birds arrive, Mr. Edmunds gave his methods of treating them, and getting them into exhibition trim. Dividing them into two groups—seedeating and insectivorous—the lecturer dealt at some length, on the feeding and general management, and gave many little hints, that not only Foreign bird fanciers, but Canary breeders will find useful. At the end of his lecture, Mr. Edmunds showed a number of stuffed specimens, pointing out the difference in the sexes, and answered a string of questions, put by various members. A hearty vote of thanks, brought an enjoyable evening to a close.—A. S. TREASURER, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN LIZARD CLUB.

First monthly meeting, held in the Fawcett-street Cafe, on May 23th, Mr. Reid presiding over a good attendance. Some useful work was got through. A set of working rules were discussed, and finally adopted. Classification for club patronage was then considered, and it was decided to patronise three Northern shows. All members' subscriptions must be paid by July meeting, to enable them to compete for club specials, and birds competing must be bred by exhibitors. Mr. Jeffrey proposed, and Mr. Davidson seconded the following resolution, which was carried with enthusiasm: "That the members of this club desire to place on record an appreciation of the splendid work of Mr. Reid, whose labours on behalf of the Lizard Canary in the North have been so fittingly crowned by the successful issue of the Northern Lizard Club." Mr. Reid suitably replied, and a vote of thanks to the chairman closed a very pleasant meeting. I shall be glad to hear of any intending members.—G. DAVIDSON, Sec., 10, Royalty, Sunderland.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Usual fortnightly meeting, held May 27th, in the Fawcett Street Cafe, Mr. J. Farrar presiding. The usual correspondence was placed before the members, after which preparations were made for the holding of the first of the young bird shows on June 11th. Points will count as follows: 1st, 6; 2nd, 5; 3rd, 4; vhc, 3; hc, 2; c, 1. First, second, and third prize winners will not be allowed to compete at subsequent shows, so that the winners at each of the three shows will be all different birds. One class each will be provided for the following varieties: Norwich, Yorkshires, Borders, Lizards, Cinnamons, Crest, or Crest-bred, British, and Mules, eight classes in all. The secretary will be in attendance at 5.30 p.m. to receive entries, and all exhibits must be staged to allow judging to commence at 6 p.m. prompt. Judge, Mr. R. H. Dixon. No charge will be made for admission to the show, which will be held in the smoke-room of the Fawcett Street Cafe, and all fanciers and friends will be heartily welcomed. I would be glad to see a large turn-out of members, as a very important notice is to be given at the conclusion of the show.—W. REID, Hon. Secretary.

MUSSELBURGH O.S.

Usual monthly meeting, held in Brown's Rooms, 83, High-street, President W. R. Dunn occupying the chair. After the usual routine of general business, a proposal was made to hold a First Feather Show on the 9th July, and that each member be limited to four entries, for which the sum of threepence per entry be charged. It was left with the president and secretary to arrange with the proprietor of the hall for that day. The show will open at about 2 o'clock, when judging will start. All exhibits will require to be in the hall at not later than 1.30, so as to give the committee time to arrange the tables and fix the labels on cages. Mr. W. R. Dunn (President) volunteered to judge the Norwich, Yorkshires and Mules, and Mr. J. G. Lumsden (Vice-president) the Border Fancies; Mr. J. Smeaton to act as referee. The classification was arranged as follows: Yorkshire two classes, Norwich two, Borders two, and Mules one class. The Visiting Committee appointed for the season are: Messrs. C. Watt and A. Fleming, Portobello and Newcraighall district; J. Smeaton and J. Pearson, Musselburgh and district; J. Barr and T. Storie, Prestonpans and district. Messrs. C. Webb and A. Fleming were appointed extra members of committee.—WM. NISBET, Sec.

PENTRE AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held at headquarters, the Queen's Hotel, Pentre, on May 25th, when four new members joined. It was decided to hold a table show for British birds on June 23rd, when Mr. G. Watkins (Trehetbert) will judge. The society are giving a silver medal as a first prize in every class. Any member wishing to join can do so by attending a meeting to be held at the headquarters on June 4th, as all fanciers are heartily invited. Anyone wanting any information can have same by writing to me. W. THOMAS, Sec., 24, Llewellyn Street, Pentre, Rhondda.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held May 28th at headquarters, Mr. G. Barkas in the chair. We would like to see a few more members at our meetings. The cup and teapot were drawn for our first feather show, the former going to the British birds, and the latter to the Canaries. It was decided to get four medals, two for Canaries, and two for British, for second and third prizes. Members please note that their subscriptions must be paid up before they are allowed to exhibit. Decided, to hold a meeting on June 18th to receive entries for above show; entries close Monday's post June 20th. Will members please rally 'round and give us a record entry for our show? We are pleased to hear our worthy chairman, Mr. G. Barkas, is down to judge Consett and Leadgate first feather shows.—J. LINDSAY.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Special meeting held at the Duke of York Hotel on May 26th, Mr. F. J. Weaver in the chair. After a little discussion about the progress of the breeding season, real business was gone into. It was decided that we hold three First Feather Shows this year, for which two dates were fixed—June 16 and July 16. For the first the following classes were drawn up: Nor. yel., cl., or variegs.; ditto buff; Yorks. yell., cl., or varieg.; ditto buff; A.O.V. Canary; and a mule or hybrid class. Mr. Crundell was elected to judge. Annual Nest Feather Show, 16th July, a specialist judge is being sought for to judge. Also decided to go in for the inter-Club cup competition between Birmingham and West Bromwich; the three delegates were elected as follows: Messrs. Weaver, Garfield, and Gibbons. This brought a businesslike meeting to a close.—J. GIBBONS.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Usual monthly meeting held at headquarters, Swan and Peacock, Wolverhampton, Mr. Max Jacquimin in the chair. Before the business of the evening commenced a vote of sympathy with the Royal Family was moved from the chair and passed in silence, all present standing. After the routine business a short paper was read—a translation from one of the German papers—by Mr. Jacquimin on the value of rape seed as a food for our variety, and was very interesting and instructive. Breeding operations are in full swing. The majority of our members seem to be doing fairly well. A good many of those present had from 20 to 40 young birds. A few of our members are doing rather badly, not being able to muster 10 young, but they hope to do better the next round. A great many birds died in shell, and bad feeding hens seem to be the general complaint. But with more settled weather a great improvement will take place without doubt. Two new members were elected, making a total of nine new members recently joined.—J. H. WILLOWS, Hon. Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

Special meeting held at the Market on May 28th, to consider where to hold the first feather show. The Secretary said he was unable to obtain the Mackworth Hotel stock rooms as on former occasions (owing to the lease on [illegible] expired), but with the help of a brother fancier—Mr. G. Balsh—had obtained the Plymouth Hall, Plymouth Street, for the occasion. The room is situated in the centre of the town, is well lighted, and capable of staging over 200 birds. Several members stated that the Society had been very fortunate in obtaining such a splendid room, and being in the centre of the town they considered the Society would be greatly benefited by the change. It was resolved that we accept the offer of the room, and that the best thanks be accorded to Mr. G. Balsh and the secretary for their services in obtaining the same. The Secretary also stated that Mr. W. S. Kirby had kindly consented to give a lecture at the next monthly meeting on "The Norwich Canary and its management." It is hoped all members will make a special effort to attend.—S. H. GEORGE, Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Monthly meeting held at Oldham Hall, Liverpool, May 26th; Mr. J. W. Metcalfe in the chair. The following were elected members:—Messrs James, Hughes, and Rumsby, and Mr. A. Brown was nominated for membership. It was decided to hold the Annual Nest Feather Show on July 23rd, and Mr. Thornton was elected to judge. A long discussion took place re the forming of a Green Border section. It was finally decided that they should become a recognised variety and he taken in on the lines of the Yorkshire and Norwich. Several specials were promised, and it is practically certain there will be a cup for competition. At time of writing there still remains a lot of details to be arranged, but everything will be done in due course. In the meantime exhibitors and breeders of Green Borders in all parts of the country are invited to join the society. Re patronage, it was decided now that there are three varieties to cater for that application be invited for 4, 8, or 12 classes. Will secretaries please note? Every consideration will be given to applications when they come up at the July meeting. July 16th is the latest date for receiving applications. Members are requested to pay their annual subscriptions, viz., 2s. 6d., as early as possible, and the secretary will be pleased to receive specials for the Nest Feather Show.—GEO. GREEN, Sec.

THE RECENT SENSATIONAL LAW CASE.

Working for the alteration of the Wild Birds' Act: The strong co-operation of readers required.

£5 Cash offered for the best essay entitled "Is it cruel to keep birds in cages?"

Since our last issue appeared conveying the full result of the test case in the High Courts in which a decision adverse to the British Bird Fancy was arrived at, we have received a very large number of letters from readers proffering help in obtaining signatures to the petitions we are having prepared to support an endeavour to secure the amendment of the present Wild Bird Protection Acts, or an amelioration of the clauses under which the Lord Chief Justice and his two brother judges came to the decision which, as we pointed out, places a premium on the slaughter of birds. We have succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of several influential gentlemen, and are pressing forward our campaign with all possible speed. But, as readers will understand, such a matter takes time, and careful consideration needs to be given to the question before the definite course of action to be pursued is decided upon. Therefore we do not propose saying more under this head now, though next week we hope to be in a position to give the Fancy full particulars of the course of action it has been decided to follow—a course of action in which we shall need and ask their fullest and heartiest co-operation to enable us to carry it to a favourable conclusion. That this co-operation will be widely and wholeheartedly forthcoming we have no doubts whatever. Copies of the petition, for instance, will be distributed all over the country, and we want as many readers as possible to undertake the collection of signatures, while we hope that secretaries of societies will furnish their members to sign the same.

There is one point we wish to deal with, a point upon which there seems to be misunderstanding. Some who have written us seem to be under the impression that the decision means that keepers of bird-shops and bird dealers generally who reside in any protected area cannot legally have British birds in their possession for purposes of sale. This is not so, however. As we stated last week, the decision affects recently-taken British birds only.

Dealers everywhere can most certainly have British birds in their possession for purposes of sale; but in protected districts the said birds must not be recently-taken. That is the full and only effect of the decision of the Appeal Court.

So far as we can ascertain, the term recently-taken may be held to cover a period of three weeks and over. Putting the period at one month, this means that dealers in London (or other closed areas) could not offer British birds for sale until one month after the close season had expired in the district wherein the birds were caught. Thus, if caught in Cambridgeshire on August 15, the birds could not be sent into London for sale until September 15 (or thereabouts) without risk of prosecution being incurred should legal action for a penalty be taken.

If dealers conform to this rule, and are in a position to produce the actual catcher of the birds if necessary (i.e., if they are summoned), then they can depose to the actual date of catching, and then they can, so far as we know, keep and sell British birds without there being any infringement of the law upon their part.

Some Opinions from Readers.

SIR,—I shall be pleased to receive petition form from you for the use of the Swansea C.B.A. We in Swansea (being in a hot bed for British birds) feel the great injustice which the new interpretation of the law will have upon us, and we are already taking steps to petition to our local representatives to use their influence on behalf of the British bird fanciers of the country, and letting them know how the true bird fancier keeps his birds.—S. H. GEORGE, secretary, Swansea C.B.A.

SIR,—I note in CAGE BIRDS the result of appeal, which I think a bad decision, and it is past my understanding. The old saying goes: "Don't rob the poor man of his beer," but I am sure there are hundreds of men who would rather be robbed of their beer than their birds; and it don't hold good that because a bird is kept in a cage it is treated badly. On the other hand, I have found that those who take up the Fancy try to get their birds to perfection, as near as possible. Listen to the Larks hung out at the windows in places like London, Birmingham, etc.; surely this is proof enough.—E. HURDLEY (Madeley).

SIR,—With the deepest regret I have read the Court's decision in CAGE BIRDS of May 28th, and feel compelled to take up an agency to collect signatures for the amendment of the Act. Therefore, I should be very pleased if you will send on two petitions to me, as I wish to place one at the club; the other will be in my possession wherever I am, and since I travel a great deal, I think I can do well in collecting signatures, and trust we shall soon alter the decision.—J. H. ALFRED (Cardiff).

SIR,—I notice that you are having petitions printed, which you propose sending to the secretaries of the various cage bird societies all over the country, with a view of getting an amendment to the Wild Birds' Protection Act. May I suggest further that every person who considers such an amendment necessary, write to their sitting Member of Parliament, calling attention to the result of the recent test case, and asking his interest and support in the matter? Personally, I propose waiting upon our M.P., taking with me a copy of last week's CAGE BIRDS, at the same time asking him to interest himself in the question, which I feel sure he will do, as he is President of our local cage bird society, and, moreover, a lover of birds. I have an idea, sir, that letters of this kind, and personal interviews will have even greater weight than petitions. I thank you for championing the cause in the way you are doing.—J. C. WILMOT (Bedford).

[We hope Mr. Wilmot's splendid example will be widely followed.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—I was very much disappointed at the result of the Test Case. Every effort must now be made to get the law altered, so one can feel safe in keeping our British birds. There are always plenty of "goody goodies" on the prowl to get a case when possible, particularly those who don't understand birds. In some cases I know there is cruelty, which should certainly be stopped; but to endeavour to prevent anyone keeping our native birds in cages under proper conditions, is monstrous. Every representation should be made to our M.P.'s to get the law altered; and a petition should be signed by all lovers of birds and presented in the proper quarter, so that this law be altered. —T. H. KINCH (Ramsay).

The National British Bird and M.C. Call a Meeting.

SIR,—The Committee of the National British Bird and Mule Club are calling a meeting at the Feathers Hotel, Gt. Chapel Street, Westminster, on Thursday, June 9th, at 8 o'clock, to consider the best means of protecting our hobby, which has been placed in jeopardy by the verdict given by the Lord Chief Justice in the appeal case of Messrs. Flower and Preston. The committee are desirous of this meeting being supported by delegates from every society that can possibly send—singing clubs, catchers, and dealers included—so that every branch of the Fancy can give their views, with a view to the amendment of the Wild Bird Protection Laws. Steps must be taken at once in this very important decision, which gravely affects every British birdkeeper throughout the country. Therefore, we appeal to every British birdkeeper to give this meeting every support. —PLUMBRIDGE AND CARR, hon. secretaries.

Several letters unavoidably held over.

Is it Cruel to Keep Birds in Cages?

£5 Cash Prize for an Essay.

We are desirous of obtaining evidence in support of the practice of keeping birds in cages—evidence which rebuts the charge that it is cruelty to confine birds in cages—a charge only made by faddists and extremists, whose knowledge of the hobby in its best aspects is probably nil. With this object in view we offer a cash prize of Five Pounds for the best essay sent in to us on or before Wednesday, June 22nd next, dealing with the subject: "Is it Cruel to keep Birds in Cages?" and stating facts within the experience or knowledge of the writer which refute any such contention.

The rules are very simple:—

1. Essays should not exceed 1,000 words in length, and must be written or typed on one side only of each sheet of paper used.
2. Essays must reach us not later than first post Wednesday, June 22nd next.
3. The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS shall be accepted as final.
4. All essays sent in become the property of CAGE BIRDS.

Faults of spelling and grammar will not be counted against any essay.

Address all essays to the Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The National British Bird and Mule Club.

An ideal outing in every way was enjoyed by the members and friends of the National British Bird and Mule Club on May 28th to Cobham, Effingham, and Horsley. A lovely day it was, warm and dry, and the way led through lovely country including low land, by riverside, and higher land, across common, and through woods and lanes, all which were teeming with bird life. We started from Cobham station (L. and S.W.R.) about 10.30 a.m., took a short path at once to Cobham and Stoke d'Abernon, and on through a straggling village to Cobham Church. Before going through the churchyard, we passed an old dwelling-house with the date 1433 (as far as my memory serves me) on it, having been repaired later and being still inhabited. The most unusual bird we identified in this part of the walk (distance about a mile) was the Reed Warber. Almost immediately after leaving the churchyard we came to the bridge over the Mole. Here we saw a pair of wild duck, but no young with them. Then we walked down the side of the river for perhaps fully two miles till we came to road again.

In this portion of the walk we identified many species, including the Blackcap, Nightingale, Willow Wren, Turtle Dove, Cuckoo, Pheasant, Redpoll (a single one), Whitethroat, Bullfinch, etc.; the least frequent being the Long-tailed Tit, of which we saw a pair of old ones and a brood of young flying about, and could easily note the distinctive markings of the young ones. We also found many nests during this part of the walk. One of the first was that of a Waterhen with one egg (in a hush and higher up than usual for this species). We also found Blackbirds', Chaffinches', Thrushes', and other nests of the commoner species. One of the prettiest and most interesting was that of a Chaffinch on the bare trunk of a large tree supported by a ledge in the middle of a field. Although most of us had passed by the nest pretty closely, the hen still sat, and even after several had returned and were looking on while photographers were busy, she remained undisturbed.

After leaving the riverside and the meadows we looked around along the edge of a wood, and here we saw the Nuthatch, and some Nightingales were singing. We also in the same corner identified the Blue Tit, Flycatcher, and Goldfinch. Then we turned the corner into the road from Cobham to the "Black Swan" (our rendezvous for lunch), and in this portion some of us had a good view of the Garden Warbler. Also we found the nest of the Willow Wren. Then we all had a good view of a White Sparrow (nearly clear) perched on the roof of a barn, and were told that it had been there for over two years. Near our hotel, where everyone did justice to the good things provided, we found a Blue Tit's nest, also a Tree-creeper's nest. The last-named was a puzzler to get a look at, but keen Mr. Carr (who had recently joined us) spotted it in some wood baulks forming the stable wall. It contained three young well forward.

From the "Black Swan" we took a lane which led to Effingham Junction station, to meet the afternoon party. We had not gone far before a nest was found by a certain gentleman (got up in a long-tail coat—quite in the West-End, Hyde Park style)—and who carried a sack of dandelion, etc., over his shoulder! This nest was first said to be a Wren's, but the construction was not right; then it was said to be a Willow Wren's, but the colour of the eggs was not right. And so, notwithstanding Mr. Trower's remonstrances over the delay, some of the cognoscenti were determined to remain and see the bird; when quick! presto! it came! It was neither the one nor the other, but a Chiff Chaff! A Wood Wren and Crossbill were also identified here.

We rather hurried over this part of the walk to Effingham station. However, the afternoon party did not have long to wait before we joined forces. The first thing then was to take the photograph of the party. We had now got on ground a good deal higher, and Effingham Common was in front of us with the usual accompaniment of furze bushes, etc., but for all that a lot of "damp" on it. Here we soon identified the Yellowhammer, Stonechat, Snipe, Peewit, Red-backed Shrike, Lesser Whitethroat, Partridge, etc., and nests were found of Linnets, Thrushes, Stonechats, Snipe (one nest with four eggs), and at the far end of the Common a Hedge Sparrow's in a rather high position with a Cuckoo's egg in it.

After leaving the Common, we split into two or three parties, and amongst the finds from there to the Railway Hotel at Horsley were the Green Woodpecker, also nests of the Wren, Robin, Whitethroat, Wood Pigeon, etc. A very interesting Wren's nest was on the trunk of a tree; also a Robin's (with six young) on a bank at the side of the road. At the Railway Hotel we saw Gulls flying overhead, which were considered to be Common Gulls. In all we saw 51 kinds, as follows:—Starling, Sparrow, Swift, Blackbird (and nests), Wild Duck, Lark, Rook, Swallow, Martin, Robin (6 young, 6 eggs, etc.), Redwing, Chaffinch (1 nest, and we think we saw several others), Sand Martin, Pheasant, Reed Warbler, Wren, Jackdaw, Thrush (and nests), Water Hen (one nest), Blackcap, Nightingale, Greenfinch (and nest), Willow Wren (and one nest), Turtle Dove, Redpoll, Whitethroat (and nests), Bullfinch, Long-tailed Tit (and young), Nuthatch, Blue Tit, Flycatcher, Goldfinch, Garden Warbler, Peewit, Cuckoo (egg in hedge), Hedge Sparrow (and nests), Great Tit, Tree Creeper, Chiff Chaff (and nest), Wood Wren, Crossbill, Yellowhammer, Linnet, Whinchat, Snipe, Red-backed Shrike, Lesser Whitethroat (and nest), Partridge, Wood Pigeon (and nest), Green Woodpecker, and Common Gull.

We were all safely in the train at 7.45 p.m., before any rain came on. Many were very much interested in insects, butterflies, dragonflies, etc., and we saw several very pretty deep blue dragon flies, and orange-tipped butterflies; and some turned their attentions to plants and flowers, several taking home bunches of purple orchis, etc.

The party included Messrs. T. R. Trower (and three friends), Shepherd, Picard, J. Tyson (and son), Harper, Silver, Weston, Thurling, Askew, Mugford, Goymer, J. Robson, G. Crabb, J. Dewhurst, J. P. Carr, C. Cooper, W. H. Vale, C. T. Maxwell, Burton, Saunders, and others—a merry party of twenty-nine all told. Mr. Trower was responsible for the arrangements (route, refreshments, etc.), and earned the goodwill of everybody present by the admirable manner in which he carried them through, the hearty thanks of the gathering being conveyed to him for doing so much towards ensuring the general enjoyment of the outing. Mr. Tyrrell (a genial relative of Mr. Trower's) and his good wife also played no small part in the success of the day, the former piloting the party over ground with which he has been familiar for many long years, and his good lady providing us during a pleasant break in the "tramp" with some most acceptable refreshments. The "high tea" at the Railway Hotel, Horsley, was a really splendid "spread," and did the proprietor of that hostelry great credit—a fitting climax to a grand day.—G. CRABB.

COLOUR FEEDS.

READ THESE and don't be gulled by anyone. This new Royal Red has cost me 2d. per lb. more than ever before, and the quality is guaranteed far above any that has ever come into England. The following gentlemen had the Hottest birds in England:—

NORWICH PLAINHEAD CUP WINNER, 1909-10.

MR. J. E. DAVIES, STOCKPORT, writes, April, 1910.—"My birds last season were the Hottest living. This helped me greatly to win Scores of First Prizes, Cups, Medals, etc., including the N.P.C. Challenge Cup in all the keenest competition. They made other birds which had been moulted on other Colour Feeds look like Natural Coloured Ones. I used nothing only your Royal Red, and I shall require another lot when your new arrives.

JAS. PRICHARD, BIG WELSH CHALLENGE CUP WINNER.

21, WOODLAND TERRACE, MOUNTAIN ASH, SOUTH WALES, 14TH APRIL, 1910.

"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—You will be most pleased to here that I have won the Welsh Norwich Challenge Cup for the best Three Birds at all Shows held under the Welsh Cage Bird Club, also Rose Bowl for best unflighted at Club Show, and Sandiford's Cup for Hottest team of Three Birds at all Club Shows through Wales. All these were fed on your Royal Red Feed, and shall send you the order this time again as there is nothing like it for Colour. Truly you are the Colour King."

MR. J. SMEATON, BIG SCOTCH CUP WINNER.

8, BELLFIELD AVENUE, MUSSELBURGH, MAY 2ND, 1910.

"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—All my birds have been fed on your colour feed, have won President's Prize Scottish Plainhead Club; Edinburgh Norwich Cup; Bruce Lindsay Cup; Cup for best colour, Preston. Fed the winner of the E.N.P.C. Gold Medal, Pendelton and Salford. I am expecting to have my usual supply again this season as your colour feed is certainly the best."

MR. BINNS, BLACKPOOL, CRYSTAL PALACE YORKSHIRE WINNER.

May 28th, 1910,—"Send me 28lbs. Royal Red, your Colour Feed did well for me last season."

MR. DORMER, GREATEST CINNAMON WINNER IN THE WORLD.

7, SPRING ST., RISHTON, NR. BLACKBURN, MAY, 1910.

"Dear Sir,—Please book me 100 lbs. of your Royal Red Feed, for I find it the best and cheapest feed that I have ever used and gives the best results. I am not giving you a list of my winnings as they have been reported through the fancy papers so often until they are threadbare, and I am being constantly asked what feed I use, and the answer is Sandiford's Royal Red. I won specials at Accrington, Blackburn, Liverpool, Nottingham, Leicester, Sunderland, Hanley, Gateshead, Newcastle, Longton, Bristol, South Shields, Wallsend, Manchester, Morpeth, Edinburgh, and Crystal Palace."

W. N. MIDGLEY, BIG PALACE WINNER, 1910.

CHESHAM HOUSE, WINSLOW, BUCKS, 23TH APRIL, 1910.

"Dear Sir,—For two seasons past I have used your Royal Red for colour feeding my Norwich. My birds on each occasion have come through a good colour, and, as you are aware, I have had a fair measure of success on the Show Bench which cannot be obtained unless a satisfactory colour is combined with the other qualities that go to make winners."

ALFRED GREY, MORPETH. APRIL 20TH, 1910.

"Mr. Sandiford, Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in stating that in my opinion, your colour feed is undoubtedly the best on the market. I did even better with it last year than any previous year, for I had the pleasure of winning one of your medals for the Hottest Fed Bird at Alwich Show; I also won over 60 first and second prizes during past show season, and all my birds were fed on your Royal Red Feed."

MR. BAKER, COWES, ANOTHER PALACE WINNER, writes—

"Once more I have the pleasure of congratulating you on the success of your Colour Feed. At every Show when I exhibited I was always well in the money. My noted Clear Yellow, that I fed entirely on your Food, won the Cup and Medal for the hottest fed bird. I think it speaks volumes for the quality of your, noted Red Feed. I was very successful at the following Shows:—Plymouth, Dulwich and Peckham, Camberwell Baths, L.R.C.A. Portsmouth, Newport, Bournemouth. Send 1 cwt. of your new Feed as soon as it arrives."

MR. J. C. BARNES, BIG JUDGE. SHEFFIELD, MAY, 1910.

"Dear Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy, I desire to advise those whose ambition it is to obtain that necessary depth and brilliancy of colour for the Show Bench, to give your Royal Red Feed a trial. For a good number of years I have used no other. The results I have obtained are so widely known throughout the Fancy that it is really absolutely unnecessary to give further details as to the wonderful power your colouring agent has upon one's stock." Winner of numerous Silver Cups, Medals, and so forth, including for colour alone 4 Cups and several Medals at various All England Shows. I can conscientiously speak most highly of the production you place before the Fancy at so low a cost to provide quite ample colour for present day requirments. A better feed I know not. My birds, year after year, have always come out ablaze in colour.

MR. SPILLMAN, DEVONPORT, NORWICH SPECIALIST and Founder of the Strain that has brought such fame to the West of England, writes—

"All my winners this season were moulted on Royal Red with a little of your Natal added, and the verdict has been whenever shown—"Always in the Money."

WHAT I HAVE!!

Is what I Offer, and

NOT what I do not possess. This latter system is becoming more prevalent than ever with a certain class, simply, I suppose, either to appear large, or palm off something else, just as the so-called cocks offered at 3/- to 3/9 in Hartz, Yorkshires, and Norwich; they are common German hens, which the shrewd German sells, so that they do not "eat their heads off," and the British "Innocent" purchases in the hope of getting a huge bargain; whereas, if he only used common sense, and the repeated warnings of the Editor of this journal, he would be spared from throwing his money away on such rubbish, to say nothing of finding out he has been "had." Let any deny this who can.

Observe few prices:—1910 Norwich Cocks, 4/-, 4/6, 5/6 upwards. Hens, 1/9, 2/-, 2/6 upwards.

Marked, 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, upwards. Hens—Clear Yellow, 3/6, 4/-, 4/6, 5/-, 7/6, 10/6, 15/-, 20/-, 30/-. Clear Buff, 3/3, 4/-, 5/-, 7/6, 10/-, 15/-, 20/-. Marked, 3/-, 4/-, 5/-, 7/6, 10/-, 15/-. Pairs Norwich Plainheads, matched for immediate breeding, 7/6, 8/6, 9/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Mr. W. D. Hogg, of Oakley, has had the good fortune to have 3 Greenfinch-Bullfinch Hybrids. One succumbed, but the other two are doing well. The second round of eggs got broken; but there are good prospects of more. I wish him every success.—SCOTCH FANCIER.

I have some Yorkies on the sticks doing well, and others in the nests, but find hens are feeding very indifferently this season. Have consequently lost a great number of youngsters through this cause, but the second round (now due) will, I hope, give better results.—H. E. PARROTT (Weybridge).

Some Ashington and District Results.

Jos. Armstrong, 31 Bor., Nor., and Cinn.; R. Rowell, 40 Nor., Bord., Crests, and Cinn.; R. Richardson, 12 Nor. and Bord.; F. Baker, 10 Nor. and Mules; I. Tomlinson, 10 Nor.; J. Crest Fanciers in the North.

After the termination of our last meeting, writes Mr. Hutchinson, hon. secretary of the Northern Crest Club, those present were anxious to learn how each one was progressing in the breeding room. The majority, I am sorry to say, have up till the present only done badly; some have eight or so, some a few more. The best I have heard of are Mr. Winter, of Tyne Dock, who has got about 40, and Mr. Lister, Gateshead, who has about 30 youngsters. Mr. Farrow, Sunderland, has gone into the teens; Mr. Swan has only got 8 on the sticks as yet. Mr. Almond, Gateshead, has only got one so far; some of his hens have not gone to nest yet. And I hear that Mr. Taylor, Gateshead, is only doing badly as yet. Mr. Thos. Robson has got 16 or 17 doing well, and well he deserves them to compensate him for the great loss he sustained last year, when he lost his whole stock. But he never seemed to get downhearted, although I'm afraid it will take him a long time to build his strain up again to what it was. Generally speaking, breeders in the North are doing very badly this season, so far. The weather we have been having is wretched; dark days and cold nights which cause the hens to feed badly and to sit so close upon the young ones at nights that a good many die through suffocation. But, like all true fanciers, we hope for better days.

If you want the best colour food, and there is only one best, you must get Ramsden's. No other peppers on the market to compare with Ramsden's. Used last season with the greatest success by hundreds of noted fanciers, judges, etc. If proof of above is needed, refer to Palace Show catalogue. Over 250 awards at the Palace Show to birds moulted solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Use no other, and when you ask for Ramsden's Peppers, see you get them. Don't be put off with inferior peppers, just to put extra profit into a shopkeeper's pocket. Read what CAGE BIRDS said of Ramsden's Puro Peppers in issue of May 28th:—"We have received from Mr. J. W. Ramsden (11, Josephine-avenue, Brixton, London, S.W.) samples of his pure tasteless pepper and pure hot Natal pepper. These peppers for colour-feeding cage birds (they are also used with great success by many noted poultry exhibitors) which have been specially selected from the finest crops of the chief growers in the world, are of magnificent colour and quality, and make it self-evident that Ramsden's peppers will during the 1910 season easily maintain their wonderful reputation for turning out exhibition birds with that intense colour and attractive bloom so necessary to the attainment of the highest honours of the show bench. Both are sold with a guarantee of absolute purity under the Food and Drugs Adulteration Act. The colour of the tasteless (or "sweet") sample is astonishing, and it should be in great demand. A sample of either or both can be had, with full directions for use, from Mr. Ramsden by sending him a penny stamp to defray the postage."—(ADVT.)

A Scottish correspondent writes that there are indications of the price of the Scotch Fancy Canary advancing, and adds that in his opinion this augurs well for the future of the "king of cage birds."

Guisbro' Priory and Dist. C.B.S.

A capital ramble took place on Whit-Monday in Whiley Wood, through the kind permission of Colonel Chaloner. The day being fine, there was a good attendance. The ramble started at 1 p.m., and the friends got back to headquarters at 6 p.m., and finished up with a good tea provided by Mr. Wears.—H. MAYS.

Under the White Rose.

BRIGHOUSE O.S. had their annual outing on May 29th, and a most enjoyable day was spent. The party numbered about 20, and they left their headquarters en route for Mytholmroyd, at which place the journey was continued on "Shanks's pony" to Bell House, and then through the woods and fields to Cragg Vale, where dinner was provided and eaten with a relish. Next they proceeded over the wild moorland district to Soyland, where rain fell and necessitated a stoppage for shelter; then onwards to Ripponden to take the train for home, which was reached shortly after dusk, just too late to be able to see to feed up for the evening. The day was voted the best ever spent by the society. I am pleased to see that the annual open show is to be held as usual. Good old Brighouse!

BRADFORD WEST have arranged a series of members' shows, lectures, etc., and to-day (Saturday, June 11th) they have invited Mr. S. Dean, of Great Horton, to try and entertain their members with a paper on "Training young birds to the show cage and colour-feeding." The society hope that their members (and the novices in particular) will attend.

THE Specialist Clubs are now getting the arrangements well in hand for next season's competitions, and any society wishing to have the patronage of any of these clubs should make application at once. The following is the number of classes required by each club, which is the only stipulation they make except where the classes are named:—Y.C.C., 6 classes; C.M.Y.C.C., 4; Y.C.B.B. and M.C., 4; O.N.P.C., 6; N.G.M.Y.C.C., 4. Any society making the above classification (as required by the respective clubs) will do well to ask for patronage. It ensures better entries, and the quality of the birds on view will be the highest obtainable, and will give great pleasure to the visitors to the show.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

Notes from Erin.

IT is with deep regret that I have to record the death of Mrs. Keating, dearly beloved mother of Mr. William Keating, of Dundalk, the well-known and respected Yorkshire enthusiast. The deceased lady always took a keen interest in her son's hobby, and we are sure all will join in sympathy with Mr. Keating and family in their bereavement.

DUNDALK C.B.A. held their annual meeting on May 27th, Dr. J. P. Lavery in the chair. A vote of thanks was accorded the outgoing secretary, Mr. P. J. Gaskin, for the valuable services rendered during his term of office. The election of officers resulted: President, Mr. J. D. Rowe; vice-presidents, Dr. J. P. Lavery and Mr. S. H. Moynagh; hon. sec., Mr. Thomas Walters; hon. treas., Mr. W. Keating; committee, Messrs. McCardle, McEnteggert, Byrne Grims, McKeown, McKellerick, and Duff.

A VOTE of thanks was accorded Dr. Lavery for having so kindly allowed members of the committee to hold their meetings at his private residence. Dr. Lavery has always taken a keen interest in the welfare of the society and its success is due in no small way to his untiring efforts. As is well-known, this busy gentleman is not a figure-head, but a real hard worker. The annual show will be held in November, and Mr. H. W. Battye is appointed to place the cards.

BREEDING operations have been brisk for the past few weeks, the weather having proved more favourable, and reports are generally more encouraging. At Dundalk Mr. Keating has 20 young Yorkies, including some very promising young birds doing for themselves. Mr. Gaskin has also about 20, and Dr. Lavery 30 young Yorkies, Mr. McEnteggert 20 Yorkies, all doing well, Mr. Duff about 18, and Mr. Walters close on a dozen Yorkies. Mr. Coyne has several promising young Yorkies and this season has tried his hand with Muling pairs with success. Mrs. Taylor, of Portrush, is doing well with her Yorkies, Norwich, and Muling pairs, and I hope will be successful in moulting out a few winners. I understand she has reared a few youngsters from her well-known Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire cock.

SLIGO fanciers are all doing well, and no doubt Messrs. Mulligan, Devins, Tighe, Osborne, etc., will have some to come forward and cause keen competition. The Dublin men, too, I hear, are not behind in numbers. I have not heard from Mr. McQuade, of Enniskillen, lately. Belfast and North of Ireland results are not yet known to me. I understand our Cork brethren are doing well. Lurgan and Larne fanciers have several Hybrids and Mules doing well.

"CLOSED RING."

The Skylark: The "Prince of Songsters."

By S. WOODROFFE (London, N.E.)

The Skylark is, in my opinion (and I believe I shall have the support of the majority of bird lovers on this point), "The Prince of Songsters." I know many place the Nightingale and Blackcap first, but their song is not so dependable, nor so constant, being heard only occasionally for a small part of the year, whereas the Skylark (that does sing) is a constant and incessant performer. His voice is melodious and robust, and his notes most pleasing in their utterance, and varied.

Those fanciers who like a robust, bold, freely delivered song, day or night, should give the Lark a trial. There are light and heavy singers, and those whose voices are too loud indoors for one's nerves, will form a great attraction hung outside, such birds being found throughout all Britain livening up many a poor street and squalid court in our towns, and seeming to bring the country into the minds and lives of those upon whose ears the beautiful song falls.

Unequalled as a House Bird.

There is no bird to equal the Lark as a house bird if—and here's the rub—it gets proper attention. Anyone who keeps the Lark and wants to enjoy good song and have strong, healthy, steady birds must be prepared to give them full attention, as regards cleanliness, food, and company or companionship.

There are two ways of securing them—hand-rearing a nest of young, and purchasing caught birds from a dealer.

Taking the case of the hand-reared bird first. The Larks are common throughout the whole length and breadth of the British Isles. Their colour, etc., are too well-known to need description here. There is very little difference in plumage 'twixt male and female, but the latter as a rule is greyer on the back and more spotted on the breast; and if they are compared side by side, the cock will be found to be longer from tip to tail, taller on leg, longer in spur, longer in ear feathers, and bigger to feel if handled; he is generally, however, very hard for a novice to pick out, I am afraid.

The birds nest on the ground, generally in a depression on cultivated land, among the growing corn or grass, or sheltered by a tuft of coarse grass, etc. The eggs are four or five in number, and of a dirty white colour, thickly spotted and speckled with brown or brownish grey. They hatch at the fourteenth day.

Hand-rearing Young.

The nestlings, or Larklets, should be taken about the tenth day. To successfully rear young birds, they should always be taken before becoming fully fledged, as they will gape more readily than when they have once left the nest. They should at first be placed in basket, or old top hat, made comfortable with moss or hay, and covered with a piece of flannel, and kept in a dark corner of your kitchen or living room, being brought into the light every hour, or at the most two hours, to be fed from earliest morn till evening. Give them a feed before you go to bed.

After some days, when the birds are well used to you and your handling, they may be placed in a close-wired cage, of good size and netted or padded top. By this time they should look for you, and readily come to the end of the cage to be fed, by means of a small stick, making the food (which I will deal with later) sloppy moist.

When about four weeks old they should be caged separately, and if handled often they will not become wild. They should feed themselves when six weeks old, and at this time they will require careful watching, as sometimes after a day or two they go off their food, and seem to go back. A drop or two of warm milk on end of stick given frequently is then a good thing. Once more for a few days feed them by hand. Do not be in a hurry to leave the water glass on all day, or they will overindulge. Once they are over the moult, you are on the road to success, providing you have been rearing cocks.

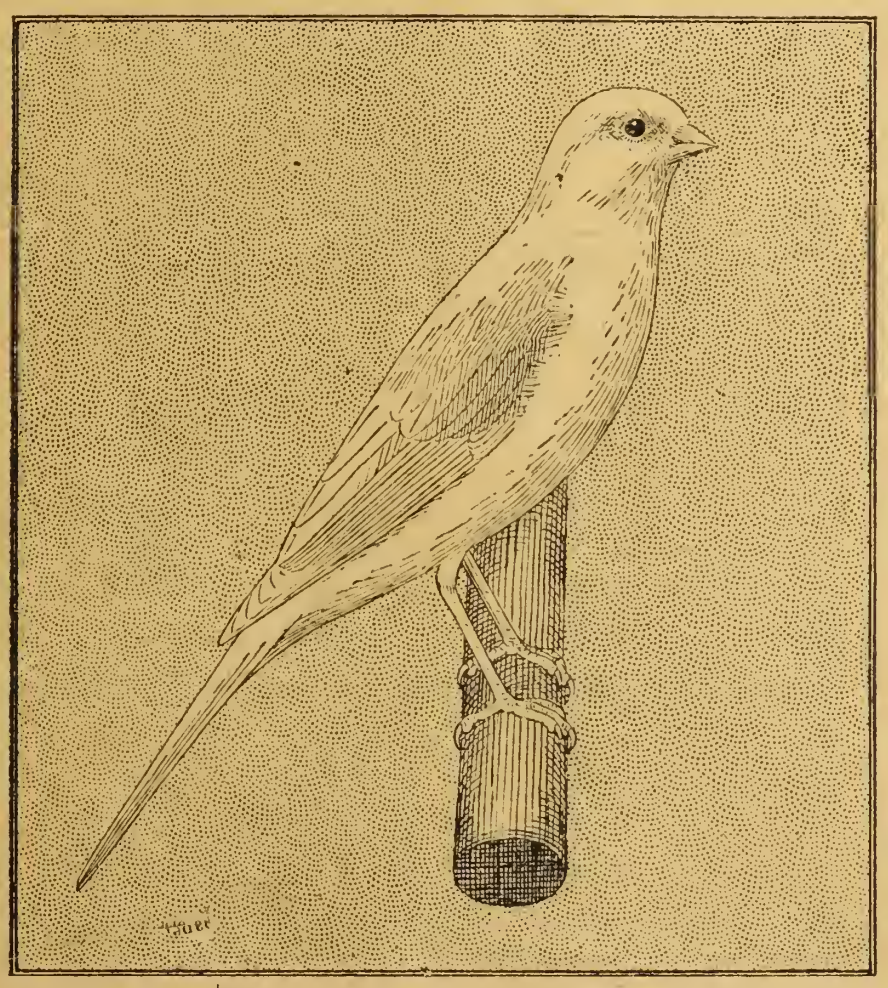
The food for hand-rearing young should be the same as they are to receive later on, with a little larger quantity of egg and insect food, and should be made wet enough to drop off the stick readily.

The Shop Bird.

Wild birds are netted in very large numbers, and may be purchased cheaply from the shops, or catchers, during the winter months. They will be found difficult to steady, and I here appeal to every fancier never to keep a Lark which does not quieten down to cage life in a week or two, but give it its liberty; it will never sing in captivity, and a wild Skylark is a painful sight to any lover of birds.

When purchasing Larks always wait and watch the birds (if needs be for an hour); look out for the largest, steadiest, but sharp and alert-looking bird, one whose wings reach well down the tail; then you may have hopes of carrying home a likely singer. The bird that flops up and down and round and round its cage — on the "go" all the time—it is a waste of time, trouble, and good food to keep. I may say that, in my opinion, the percentage of good singers is not large taking shop-sold birds as a rule.

A good cage, to my mind, should be one twice as long as those offered in some shops. Remember, this bird depends for exercise on its running from end to end of its cage. I suggest 20ins. to 24ins. by 8ins. by 8ins. as being a good size, though hundreds of first-class birds are kept in the ordinary 12in. cage, or the bow-fronted cage. So if means do not allow you to have a larger one, don't despair. The top should be netted, or covered with canvas (netting is less likely to harbour insect pests) for the bird will often attempt to rise when in full song, and may be injure itself.



Food and water (the latter in a glass vessel) must be placed outside, or the birds will soon be soiled. The Lark does not bathe, but cleans himself like fowls, etc.—by means of a dust bath. So spread the floor of the cage with a quarter-inch of road grit, bird sand, and little insect powder mixed; also gently spray your bird once a week.

Cages should be cleaned out twice weekly and you should place a small tuft of grass inside each time. The Lark is a very hardy bird, and may be kept in captivity for many years upon ordinary food.

A Matter of Opinion.

But on the question of feeding fanciers differ. I will not dictate, but give my method. I use two different sorts of food alternately, viz., No. 1: Peameal, Indian meal, crushed sweet biscuits, 1lb. of each; soft sugar, German rape, turnip seed, crushed hemp, ¼lb. of each. Mix well, place in baking tin, add two eggs and ¼lb. beef dripping, and bake half an hour. This will keep in closed tin well. No. 2: Trower's Cecto (or other good insect food) 1lb., crushed hemp ½lb., maw seed and ground rice ¼lb. each. Mix well and keep in separate tin.

For use, take a small quantity of crushed puppy meal, dog biscuit, or Melox, soak well, and add sufficient of either of the above foods to make crumbly (almost dry) moist. Three times a week I use chopped lettuce or carrot to moisten the food instead of the soaked biscuit. Three or four mealworms I give daily to each bird, and a lettuce or cabbage leaf two or three times a week. Twice a week I give a spoonful of Canary seed and crushed oats, sprinkled on floor of cage, and other days the same quantity of dry ants' eggs. On this method I am amply repaid for my trouble with beautiful, melodious song, winter and summer. I hope this account of my treatment will induce some more readers of CAGE BIRDS to take up with this species, and thus become, like me, a Lark lover.

The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The Budgerigar: A Charming Aviary Bird.

By A. GREEN.

Aviculture has greatly increased during these last ten years in this country, and the interest in foreign birds has grown rapidly amongst all grades of society, so that it is becoming the rule rather than the exception to find persons of good social position in possession of birds of some kind. CAGE BIRDS is no doubt doing a great work on behalf of aviculture, and is raising it to a higher standard than it has ever before reached.

A Charming Little Parrot.

Foreign birds stand at present in the front rank for outdoor aviaries, and the Budgerigar is perhaps the most kept bird of any. This charming little Parrot, so beautiful in colour and marking, so symmetrical in form and vivacious in manner, with a sweet miniature song and a good breeder in captivity, is a great favourite of mine.

My experience is that its aviary should be outdoors, as large as possible, and designed to suit the peculiarities of the bird. For instance, it is a mistake to put glass in the roof, as the Budgerigar is extremely afraid of the feline species, and the passage of a cat in its nocturnal rambles over the glass is liable to set the whole aviary in a state of panic.

A Suitable Aviary.

An aviary of the following dimensions I found very suitable: 36ft. long, 10ft. wide, by 10ft. high, with span roof, and one-third of solid material. If of wood it is best to have it lined and the walls sandwiched with thick paper covered with coal tar or linseed oil. This prevents draughts, which Budgerigars cannot endure with impunity.

To exclude mice (which these birds detest) a 6in. board running parallel with the ground and below the wirework should run all round the aviary, including even the door. When the mouse ascending the outside of aviary reaches this blockade he stops, as he cannot imitate a fly by walking on a ceiling, as it were.

The foundation for the aviary is an important matter; it should be of concrete, 3ins. thick, and made of five parts sand and one Portland cement, with broken brick or stone thrown in as "plums." To make the aviary complete, the wirework on the roof of flight should have a second wiring raised 4in. above the first, which makes it cat-proof. Here let me say that although the cat is so much dreaded and even detested by the aviarist, it is really his best friend if his aviary is only made Cats do not go where birds are out of their reach.

Quite "At Home."

The Budgerigar in such an aviary is perhaps even more happy than those living in a wild state. Budgerigars left without food for some hours do not shell the seed, but swallow it whole, as a soft-billed bird does. But they have the power of regurgitation.

A remarkable proof of the intensity of the love and attachment of the male to the female is the fact that if a number of these birds run out of food, all the cocks die first, which proves that the hens are fed by the cocks in the last extremity by regurgitated food. On three different occasions I have proved this beyond all doubt. On the first occasion there were five pairs, and five cocks lay dead. The hens all recovered and bred young. Second case: three pairs; result, the same. Third case: seven pairs, with all cocks dead and one hen only dead: the others recovered. Each case was caused by inevitable absence from home.

Individual Budgerigars are tricky and dangerous to small birds, but I found the Skylark which was with them quite safe. Perhaps he was treated as a musician, for he sang lustily. Cockatiels, Lovebirds, and all the Cardinals are safe with them. An insectivorous bird is less likely to be attacked than a seed-eater, and my Japanese Robin "dodged" them easily. However, all the small Finches are best in other aviaries.

I never take Budgerigars indoors, as they stand our coldest winters if only the food is suitable. Food: Canary seed, two parts, white millet one part, grit, fresh water, seeding grass, and household bread soaked in cold water, when breeding.

The Marked Bird: Its Uses and Breeding.

By F. ARMSTRONG.

A Lecture delivered before the Halifax Ornithological Society on May 7.

At the special invitation of your esteemed President and Secretary, I will endeavour to the best of my ability to give you a paper on "The Marked Bird: Its Breeding and Uses." As many of you are aware, the "Marked Bird" has always been a great favourite of mine, although at one time there was only slight encouragement to fanciers to breed the beautiful green-marked variety, as form had to be kept up as well as beauty and correctness of marking. This, I think you will agree with me, was a double difficulty, but one which I think, with judicious care and mating, could be overcome. Now, thanks to the National Green Marked Yorkshire Canary Club, of which I have the honour to be the Hon. Sec. and Treas., every encouragement is given to its breeding from the Open Champion (as he is termed) down to the Junior Novice, and by the latter I mean one who has not won a first prize in open or Yorkshire Union Novice Gold Medal competition. Every encouragement is now given to the latter by the Club, as they allow them to count their points in the marked classes (novice) whilst competing for their Novice Gold Medal, so that they have two chances for one entry fee at shows.

The "Marked Bird" Described.

Perhaps I had better here explain, as far as possible, what I mean by the "Marked Bird" (green or cinnamon, Yorkshire, Norwich or Border). The marked bird, as we now know it, is one which has two or more technical marks, and these are to be found only on the eyes, wings or tail. Here again arises the difficulty especially for the novice what the term "technical marks" means. These are marks produced or brought forth in distinct particular positions.

I am afraid many have an erroneous idea that a "cap-marked bird," whose cap extends down to or even below its eyes, or a whole dark-tailed bird, possesses the particular technical marks. I wish to impress upon you here that this is a mistaken conception. The markings must be clear and separate on the particular points mentioned, and the tail on both sides only.

Again, another great difficulty appears to exist as to what is really meant by a "foul-marked bird." A great difference exists between what we term a "foul-marked bird," and what the Green Canary Association terms a "foul mark." The definition, as we know, is that a foul-marked bird is one which has a splashed or marked breast. It must also possess, in addition at least two technical marks to be eligible to compete for the National Green Marked Y.C.C. specials, or in the classes provided under their patronage.

The Highest Form of Variegation.

Having now somewhat cleared away the misunderstanding respecting these particular terms, I will endeavour to deal with and explain (seriatim) each of the three subdivisions into which the marked birds are divided. First and foremost, in my humble estimation, as well as in the opinion of most of our prominent noted judges is the "evenly-marked variety." This is the highest form of variegation; it is therefore extremely desirable that the object of breeders should be to try for the nearest approach to evenness in marking whilst still retaining all the essential qualities (type, position, feather, etc.) of the particular variety to which their breed belongs. You will see that while form and approximate excellence in markings count above equally good form, and merely irregular markings or vice versa, superior form must come above everything. Still, I am sorry to say that many of our judges are so attracted by the beauty of the markings that they overlook form altogether.

The evenly marked is the most beautiful and attractive sub-division of any variety, even superior, in my humble estimation, to the noted clear yellow, on account of its double difficulty in breeding; and it should take premier position. At one time this variety was much more common than is the case at present in both the Yorkshire and Norwich varieties, scarcely any typical birds of either variety existing. The only variety I know of where this particular class of bird is to be found is in the smart Border Fancy. And why? Because they are particularly catered for by those fanciers. I am pleased to say that this variety is now being encouraged and catered for in the Yorkshire variety by the National Green Marked Y.C.C. Many now even go so far as to object to them on the grounds that it is a temptation to be dishonest and to fake their specimens. Still, I can see hope, as there is no distinct class for them and no advantage thereby to be gained. I also think you will agree that the Fancy of to-day, compared with that of 15 or 20 years ago, is by far more enlightened than in those days. Faking would be pretty soon discovered by some one, and woe betide to the individual caught, as his reputation, etc., would be doomed at once and his punishment severe. The risks, in my estimation, are far too great for the advantages accruing, and may be dismissed to a large extent.

The Evenly Marked Bird.

An evenly-marked bird must be what is termed four-pointed (both wings and both eyes), or six pointed (both wings, both eyes, and both sides of tail). The more precise the markings the better. Those on the eyes should go round like the rims of a pair of spectacles. The underflight feathers (green or cinnamon) should be light, and the short flight feathers dark, according to the variety. The markings must be level in a sense, and as only these technical markings count, these should be clearly defined in outline. There must be no other markings on the body. Underflue is not taken into consideration; but points are deducted if it is conspicuous.

One eye and one wing mark, although two marks, would not be counted as two-pointed. Remember, that in this variety and the next to be considered the beauty of the markings consists in the exquisite form and exactness as well as in depth of colour. We differ in this respect, as we have allowed one eye and one wing, or wing and tail mark to count as technical markings. For scale of points in this variety see CAGE BIRDS of Jan. 15th. This includes both the Cinnamon and Green variety.

Unevenly Marked Birds.

Now, the word "unevenly" more or less explains this variety according to the experience of the breeder. For the benefit of the younger fanciers, however, I will explain its difference from the former variety.

This term only applies to the distinct markings, and a bird may have either two, three, or five technical marks (on eyes, wings or tail), separately, or in addition to any other variegation on its body. A bird with four or six marks will also come under this variety if variegated on the head or body. Should a class be only formed for "ticks," and unevenly-marked birds, then the standard they are judged from is that of the clear birds, with deductions for markings. This, I think most of you will agree with me, was decidedly unfair and detrimental to the interests of this variety, and one of the great reasons which led to the formation of the National Green Marked Y.C.C.

The objects of this club in the Yorkshire variety is to encourage both its breeding and exhibiting. If an unevenly-marked class was given in the schedule before, it always read "Yellow or Buff," again putting the premium on the yellow bird; but as often, perhaps, as not it read "Ticked or Unevenly-marked." Some may say I had no cause to complain, as my old champion often took premier position even in that class, including first prize at the Crystal Palace Jubilee Show. Why? Simply because he won on form (type, quality, position and colour). This is, to my mind, one great reason why this variety was neglected. Unfortunately, the formation of this club only took place on May 22nd, 1909, after all fanciers had commenced breeding; with the consequent result that the classes under its patronage only averaged about 12 per class. This year I have every reason for believing that the entries and competition will be much keener, as breeders have made preparations and included these in their stock.

The Foul-marked Bird.

This, the last sub-division, is looked upon with some amount of contempt by some breeders, exhibitors, and judges. They argue that nobody breeds for them, and that, therefore, they should be found only in the breeding room. I fail to see eye to eye with them on this particular point. If a bird is valuable in one thing why debar it in another? It may possibly be equal or even superior in form to any of the others; yet because of its markings it is tabooed. Still, according to the rule, form must supersede inferiority in this respect. If the foul is accepted (Greens, Yorkshires, or Norwich), why in one branch of a variety and not in another? I fail to see. I was always of opinion that form had its beauty, and that colour was more or less a secondary consideration. Apparently the latter is of vital importance in the estimation of some of our judges and fanciers. Still, I beg to differ. The only way to overcome this prejudice is for fanciers to write and compel the judges to accept them, and not let the Fancy be governed by a few. It is this apathy and indifference of fanciers at the proper time that retards progress, and often leads to complaining.

The Uses of the Marked Bird.

This, I consider is a matter of vital importance to the new beginner in the Fancy: why do we use certain birds for certain objects? As you are all well aware, the depth of colour is obtained from a proper green-marked bird. You may say, what am I to do to obtain a proper green marked bird? I should suggest your getting a typical yellow grass-green cock and pair it to a clear buff hen of both type and quality; you would then obtain darker eyes and wing markings, especially if you intend going in for evenly marked birds. You will get depth of colour much greater this way than from the Cinnamon, as the latter always gives a bronze cast. The Cinnamon always gives a fine texture to the quality of the feather, and this is one of the reasons for its introduction into the Yorkshire. There is scarcely a bird which does not possess traces of Cinnamon blood in it. Once in, it is never eradicated.

The Washing of Birds for Exhibition.

By ALBERT BURTENSHAW.

A Paper read before the members of the Brighton C.B.A. on May 11th.

In response to the invitation of the Hon. Sec., Mr. A. T. Riddles, the members of the Brighton C.B.A. met in large numbers at their headquarters, the King and Queen Hotel, Marlborough Place, on May 11th, when several well-known lady fanciers were present. This society is making rapid progress and has every prospect of becoming one of the best on the south coast. Mr. C. Peirson acted as chairman.

I have selected for my subject, said Mr. Burtenshaw, one whose discussion will prove useful to those who wash their birds for the show bench. I will endeavour, with the aid of the pen and ink sketches (these had been most ably drawn by Miss J. Burtenshaw) to make clear to you my process of holding and washing a bird. It is a somewhat difficult job to bring anything fresh before you, as there are so many articles in the Press on the washing of cage birds for the show bench that one is at his wits' end, as the saying is, to bring anything new to you. And we have also had many lectures on the subject. It has struck me, however, that a paper on how to hold a bird to wash it would be welcome, also useful.

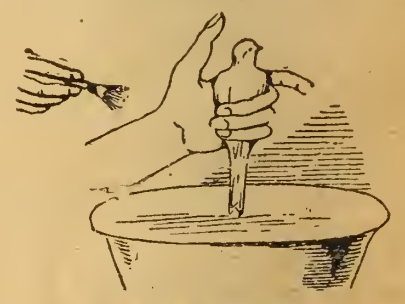
We all well know that our birds must be clean before they are sent out to shows. If they are not their chances of success are few. I am not an expert at bird-washing, but I am always pleased with my birds when they are washed, and they hold their own with others.

The first sketch is of a basin, two brushes, and a sponge. The one brush is an ordinary camel-hair one. No. 2 brush is a very small one for the face; this brush I tie up, so as to make it a little stiff and pointed, in order that I may work around the beak and eyes.



Washing the Back.

Before you start washing a bird, have everything by your side—your three basins, the brushes, sponge, strips of flannel, drying cage, and also a soft towel. Choose a time for the process when you have a nice fire, and, if you can, be by yourself. Start by washing (as in sketch 2) the tail and flights. Should they be very dirty, place them on the side of the basin, and rub them well with plenty of soap, holding the bird as sketched. Sketch 3 shows the process of washing the wings. Spread them on the side of the basin and work the brush downwards. Sketch 4 shows the turning of a bird over ready to wash the neck, and Sketch 5 depicts the washing of the face, which is the most difficult part. This is where the small pencil-brush plays a successful part; you cannot use a large one unless you smother the bird with lather; and this is dangerous to the eyes.

Sketch 6 shows my method of washing the sides, and Sketch 7 how to wash the back. The last sketch, No. 8, is a most important one; it shows how to rinse the bird. It is not necessary to "drown" the bird with water. Squeeze the sponge with clean water below the crown of the bird's head; it is not necessary for all the rinsing water to flow over the head. Be as quick as you can in doing the work. Take care and finish well.

After the rinsing, dab the birds in a nice soft bath towel, in order to get as much water out of them as you can. Roll them up in the strips of flannel that have been previously warmed by the fire. Roll them up in it, just leaving the beak out. Place them in the drying cage, which must be clean and dry, with their tails towards the fire. The heat from the fire then has a tendency to draw the feathers in the direction they should lie. I use a Yorkshire show cage for my drying cage. Place two thin pieces of board on the bottom perches; by doing this you will be able to get them through the door. And the same cage makes an ideal spraying cage, as the bird can stand on the top perch when being sprayed, and the pieces of board will prevent the bird from going on to the bottom of the cage.

About three days before sending the birds out to a show, spray them with luke-warm water, and add a teaspoonful of glycerine to a quart of water for the purpose. Send them out in clean cages; not that the cages are judged, but they have a marked effect on your bird. I might say that for British birds I have not found anything equal to rain water for washing them. I do not care to wash with soap and water any British birds except their feet, flights and tail. Spray them, rather, with clean rain water, and I feel sure from experience you will be pleased with the result.

I hope that my few remarks will prove to have benefited someone; if they have, I shall be amply rewarded for my trouble. In conclusion, I thank you for your kind attention. I shall be pleased to answer any questions as best I can.

Mr. Roust: Do you give any stimulants to your birds after washing them, or give them baths after washing?—No, to the farmer; and if the bird is not clean I wash it again. Mr. Gibb: How long does it take you to wash a bird?—About ten minutes. Mr. C. Peirson: Do you think that an old tooth brush is as good as anything to wash a bird with?—I have never tried one myself, but I should say that it was much too stiff. An old badger-hair shaving brush will do. Mr. Bicknell: What temperature do you have the water for washing birds?—So that you can bear your knuckles in it. Mr. Gibb: Would you advise putting a bird right into the water at once?—No; should a bird be a bit "fitty," it is a dangerous thing to do, and in most cases proves fatal. I soak their feet and tails first, then sprinkle a little water over their heads with my fingers. Mr. C. Peirson: Do you think that a dry sponge is good for getting the water out of the bird?—I like to use a warm bath towel, as it is nice and soft.

A vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Roust and seconded by Mr. France; and Mr. Burtenshaw's reply concluded a most enjoyable evening.

GREAT £20 CASH PRIZES COMPETITION FOR READERS OF "CAGE BIRDS."

In order to stimulate interest in "Cage Birds" between now and the first week in August we have decided to institute a competition on the undermentioned lines and offer £20 in cash prizes upon the following scale:—

First Prize	.. ..	TEN POUNDS.
Third Prize	.. ..	TWO POUNDS.
Fourth Prize	.. ..	ONE POUND.
Fifth Prize	.. ..	ONE POUND.
Sixth Prize	.. ..	ONE POUND.

Eighth Prize	.. ..	ONE POUND.

Also Twenty Consolation Prizes of a Bound Volume or a Framed Plate, at the Winner's option.

In every copy of "Cage Birds" published from now till July 23rd next, we shall print a triangular coupon. This coupon (see below) is provided with a panel upon each side, each panel must be filled in with the name and address in full of a new reader of the paper. One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each coupon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

For each coupon so sent in with three halfpence in stamps we will send free copies of "Cage Birds" to each of those whose names and addresses appear thereon. Each of these free copies will contain a coupon which in its turn will be available for competition purposes if sent to us properly filled in with three further names and addresses.

RULES.

It must be borne in mind by competitors that:
(1) Each coupon must be legibly and correctly filled up (pencil will do) with the full names and addresses of three new readers of "Cage Birds." (Either actual or possible new readers.)
(2) The prizes will go to the competitors who send in the largest number of properly filled in coupons.
(3) The competition will close finally on Wednesday, July 27th, and no coupons received after first post on that date will be allowed to count in the competition.
(4) The Editor's decision on any point in dispute will be final.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons, which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1s. for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 539
The First Coupon appeared in our Issue of May 28th last.

In the Courts.

Cruelty to Swan Goes Unpunished.

The interesting question, whether a Swan is to be regarded as domesticated or not, was raised in a case just heard at Keighley, in which Alfred Peake, a labourer, of Steeton, was summoned by the R.S.P.C.A. for cruelty to a Swan. For the prosecution it was stated that defendant was seen by three witnesses to go to the bank of Messrs. W. and J. Bairstow's mill dam, at Steeton, and attack with a hay fork a female Swan, which was then on its nest. The male Swan, which was swimming about, was beaten also, but not to the same extent. The female bird was later found dead.

Mr. C. P. Cass, for the defence, contended that no charge of cruelty could lie in the case of a Swan, as it was not domesticated. The Act of 1849 gave a list of domestic animals, and the Act of 1854 extended its operation to any other domestic animal not mentioned in the previous Act, by the words "any other kind or species whatever, and whether a quadruped or not"; but he contended that this really meant any kind of species of "domestic" animal. The Swan was a migratory bird, and was free to come and go. It was not fed or looked after by anyone in particular. He had gone to the trouble of looking into Morris's "British Birds," in which the Swan was treated of under the terms "wild" and "savage."—The Chairman (Mr. Jno. Sugden): So is a goose, in the first instance.—Mr. Cass replied that unless something was done to domesticate such birds, they remained wild, but if a man took a duck and fed it in a poultry yard, it became domesticated. Later on Mr. Cass said he had evidence to refute the case that had been set up in the evidence given.

After further argument, the Chairman said that if the birds had been looked after by some individual on a regular system he should have been inclined to stretch a point, and call them domesticated, but seeing that they had only been casually fed, and in view of the advice tendered by their Clerk, the Bench could not hold that they were domestic animals, and the case would therefore fail.—"Newcastle Chronicle."

Bird-Nesting in Liverpool Parks.

On May 18th G. Crew (13), D. Kennedy (15), E. Roberts (14), and C. Large (14) were brought before the Stipendiary magistrate (Mr. T. Shepherd Little) charged with bird-nesting in Sefton Park. Evidence was given that this offence was frequently committed, and that although repeated cautions had been given no good effect resulted. It had therefore been decided to prosecute, and informations had been duly laid by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Two boys were fined 2s. 6d. each. Roberts had been cautioned before, and was now fined 2s. 6d. and costs; Large had been cautioned, and was fined 10s and costs.—The magistrate said that unless this thing were put a stop to it might be necessary to impose the full penalty of £5 and costs.

CANARY QUERIES.

Doing Nothing Businesslike.

Uneasy.—You say nothing about the cock, whether he is in good condition or song. And I note you give 10ft. as the width of the window in the room. If this is correct, it is practically the whole length of one side of the room, and if there are one or two hinged sashes to open as desired there should be no necessity for keeping the door open all day. The prolonged moulting points to the presence of draughts, although you say they are non-existent. You should look well into this question. If the birds still show no signs of nesting separate them to single cages. Place them so that the hens will be in view of the cock. Give a staple of plain canary seed only. Every third day give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, teazle, and millet, and every day a good-sized spray of chickweed and two leaves of dandelion each. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, a crystal of sulphate of iron half as big, and six drops of dilute sulphuric acid every second day. Continue this for a week, and give nothing else. After that, for the next week, in addition to the same staple, give half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar and gold of pleasure seed. On alternate days give half a teaspoonful to each of the same mixture as mentioned above, and two or three crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give six drops of tincture of gentian, and four of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. At the end of this course you may try mating them again. Put the cock with only one hen at a time—not all three together.

A Bad Outlook.

T. R. Baker.—I am afraid you have septic fever among your stock, and would strongly advise you to send the next that dies for post-mortem, to put the matter beyond doubt. Meantime look well into all your seeds and other foods, to see if they are all perfectly sound and sweet. Keep the cages and perches scrupulously clean; cover the floors with a good layer of pine sawdust, and remove it, burn it at once, and replace with fresh at least every second day for a time. Give a plain seed diet as already advised a little crushed plain biscuit, given dry, and a free supply of green-food. For a few days whilst the birds appear to eat but little seed give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, but stop this as soon as they are eating seed freely, and do not give any moist soft foods freely. Remove all the apparently healthy birds to another room quite isolated from the sick birds, and keep the two groups totally isolated. Should any of the healthy ones begin to show the same symptoms at once remove it, or them, cage and all, back to sick group, and let it take its chance with them. Any cage that becomes vacant through deaths should be taken right away and not used again until it has undergone thorough disinfection. Of cure, there is none; but to tone up the birds and perhaps help them to win you may add four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid to the water every second day for a week. After that alter it to six of gentian and four of acid every second day for another week or two. Do not introduce any fresh birds into your stock until this disease is thoroughly eradicated.

Losing Young.

J.R.—I take it that the hens feed the young up to the ninth or twelfth day, and then cease doing so. Do you leave the cock with the hen or take him away when she commences to sit? Try the reverse method the next round—that is, if you have been leaving him with the hen, next round remove him as soon as the hen commences to sit, and leave her to bring up the young by herself; but if you have already been doing this, try leaving him with her the next time. Feed on plain canary seed only whilst sitting. When young are hatched give a small quantity of egg food fresh two or three times a day. Give very small quantities at first; let little and often be the rule, and fresh each time. On the fourth day begin to give a little chickweed, lettuce, or flower heads of groundsel, fresh and often, in the same way as egg food. Do not begin to give hemp until the young are twelve days old. A separate saucer of soaked rape may be given when they are a week old, if hens show signs of flagging. Also mix a pinch of maw in the egg food in that event. Make your egg food with equal parts egg, crumb of stale bread, and crushed stale sponge cake. Add no moisture other than that contained in the egg. Should signs of flagging appear, at once add a crystal of sulphate of soda to the drinking water for one-half of each day. Allow them to have it until midday, then throw out and give pure water for the rest of the day. Also offer a bath daily, in which you have dissolved a teaspoonful of common salt. Finally, and most important, interfere with the hen and nest as little as possible.

An Old Friend.

W. D. B.—Do not give any pure yolk at all when young are hatched, but start mixing with it an equal quantity of crumb of stale household bread from the first, and gradually bring it, by the fourth or fifth day, to consist of equal parts of egg, bread crumbs, and crushed stale sponge cake. Do not add any moisture to it other than that which is in the egg yolk. When the young are a week old you may begin to use both yolk and white of egg. If hens show any signs of flagging sprinkle egg food with maw seed from the fourth day, and at a week old add a little soaked rape daily in a separate vessel. When twelve or fourteen days old, not earlier, begin to give crushed hemp. Start with green food on the fourth day; give only a little at first, fresh, twice a day, and after a few days give quite liberally. Use chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, or lettuce. Egg food also give in limited quantities, and fresh at least twice a day. Aim at giving just as much as the birds will clear up just before the next supply in due. Offer a bath daily if the weather is warm, and dissolve a teaspoonful of common salt in it. If the hens then show signs of flagging dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the water each day, and let them have this until midday, then throw out and give fresh pure water for the rest of the day.

Encouraging, Isn't It?

Silk.—Not very, "Silk"; though I expect that remark was "writ sarcastic." Your record is truly a most unhappy one, but take heart of grace. Your feeding arrangements are doubtless the chief cause of your trouble. Now, when your hens have laid their complement of eggs, and began to sit, cut off practically all the extra items, and limit the diet to a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. Give a pinch of hemp now and again only in the event of a cold spell of weather coming on, and a teaspoonful of egg-food between a pair not oftener than twice a week. A tiny scrap of green-food—not dandelion—may be given now and again. On the day young are due to hatch give a small quantity of egg-food. Continue giving this in small quantities, fresh, at least twice a day—not once only—three times would be better; aim at giving only just as much each time as will be quite cleared up just before the next supply is due. On the fourth day begin to give a little green-food—lettuce, chickweed, or groundsel—but no dandelion at all. Give this also in small quantities, fresh, twice a day. You may add a sprinkling of maw seed to the egg-food when about a week old, and if hens show signs of flagging, give also a little soaked rape in a separate vessel. Do not begin to give crushed hemp until the young are twelve days old. If any signs of flagging appear add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea to the water for one half of each day, and give the hens a bath each day for two or three days in which you have dissolved a teaspoonful of common table salt.

Brevities.

Sore Feet (Paradox).—In the first place I cannot see the necessity for taking the bird out of the cage to clean it, if by this you mean to clean the cage. Your treatment would do very nicely. But if the sores are not quite well by now bathe them for a few minutes in a solution of horacic acid, dry gently, and anoint with zinc ointment for a few days. You might advantageously use sawdust in cage until feet are well. Give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed every second day for a week. If quite bright and active there is no reason why you should not mate him. You say your perches are 1¼ins. diameter; this is surely a mistake. Trim them down to a flattened oval shape, ¾in. by ½in.

Defective Beaks (Mandibles).—These cases sometimes occur as a result of injury to the mandibles during the feeding process, whilst the birds are very young. The beaks are occasionally nipped, either accidentally or otherwise by the cock. As the birds appear to have appreciable amount of upper mandible, I do not think there should be any necessity to destroy them. When they leave the nest, and for some time after leaving the parents, give them all their food in vessels in such a position that they can dig their beaks amongst it deeply enough to get a grip between the mandibles. If they feed themselves all right in this way, it is possible that the mandibles may become equal in length in a few months time.

Lump on Head (H. Spooner).—The small lump is probably a vesicle filled with air. Prick it with a clean needle. Press gently to see if any fluid escapes, and, if so, gently press all out and anoint the spot with carbolised vaseline. If no fluid appears the bleb will disappear in a few hours most likely. Should it reappear in a few days repeat the pricking. The lice would not cause it, but they tend to show that the bird is not in a very robust condition. Give it a good dusting with pyrethrum powder, then roll up in a handkerchief for a quarter of an hour before you allow it to shake off the powder. Let it bathe freely, and add a few drops of essence of quassia to the bathing water twice a week. Add twenty drops of chemical food to its drinking water every second day for a week or two.

Slow Starters (W. H. D.).—It is not unlikely that the pair you say have torn the lining out of the nest pan are settled down to business by the time this appears. Have you offered any nesting material? You must provide a little cowhair, or some substitute, for the hens to line the pans independently of the lining you find fastened in them. If they are not yet gone to nest give a piece of bread and milk rather larger than a hazel nut with four drops of cod-liver emulsion on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of two parts each hemp, inga, and teazle, and one part each maw, sesame, and gold of pleasure. Give two or three crisp leaves of dandelion daily. See Mr. Weston's replies for answer about Linnet, which should have been written on a separate sheet to avoid delay.

Too Early Nesting and Clear Eggs (Amateur).—Sorry your query reached too late for reply to get in last issue. You ought to have said how you feed and treat the birds. The cause is undoubtedly injudicious management. I note you say the hens go to nest again when the young are a fortnight, yet you do not return the cocks until the young are a month old. This may account for you having so many clear eggs. You will find one or two detailed replies this week about the proper feeding when young are being reared. If you are still in doubt write again, and give particulars of your treatment, when I shall be pleased to advise you.

Clear Eggs (Novice).—I am not clear what you mean by saying the birds are kept in a "cold room, but interrupted." If the room is dry and free from cold draughts there is no reason why the birds should not do all right in it. The clear eggs may arise from a variety of causes quite independently of the room, although it is quite possible the cold snaps of weather were the cause. Give the birds a crystal of soda the size of a split pea in the water every second day for a week, and on the alternate days six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel. In addition to the usual staple seed diet give a small piece of bread and milk with four drops of cod-liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a week, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of the seed mixture, minus the hemp, advised to "W.H.D."

Dallying Yorkshires (Heathen).—You only want to exercise a little patience, although rather late for the display of this virtue. The hen will probably go to nest all right very soon, but you can only expect to get one nest from her now this season. You may treat the pair for a week the same as advised to "W.H.D." As regards your second question, I have had no personal experience with that particular article, so prefer not to express an opinion. A really good feeding hen, however, will rear a brood on almost any of the prepared articles, or even on seed and green food alone, if limited in choice.

Young Dying (Disheartened).—When the young are taken quite away from the parents, which will be at about a month old, you should give an unlimited supply of good sound Canary seed only as a staple. Continue to give a little egg food daily, consisting of one part egg to two parts bread crumbs, sprinkled with a little maw seed, until you find the birds cracking the Canary seed quite easily, and in sufficient quantity to support themselves. When this happens you should reduce the quantity of egg food to about a small teaspoonful per bird twice a week, and once a week give a little bread and milk. When first removed you will also give a little cracked hemp and summer rape daily, separately, until they are well on Canary, and then gradually withdraw this. At the end of weaning process the diet will therefore consist of—staple, unlimited Canary daily, egg food or bread and milk in quantity named, every second day; on alternate days half a teaspoonful of summer rape twice each week, and similar quantity of hemp on other two days. Give no green food for first few days after removal, then use such things as seedy spikes of shepherd's purse, and plantain stalks to begin with, and use sparingly.

A Question of Fertility (Lilac).—Many thanks for your letter giving account of hatching of eggs. Glad to hear they all hatched successfully. It would be interesting to know the total length of time the cock was wholly separated from the hen before the last two eggs were laid.

Eggs Dried Up (Railways).—The reason is that the shells are slightly imperfect, being of too porous a nature, and thus allowing the moisture to evaporate. If the hen has not gone to nest again, when she is about doing so you might add twenty drops of chemical food to the water daily until she has laid her complement of eggs. Also get a little limely old mortar and smash up to coarse powder and mix with the sand on cage floor.

Scalped Canary (A New Beginner).—You charge "Master" Bullie with the mischief, but if you have not quite unquestionable proof of it I should be more inclined to suspect his missus. If the scalp is not healed as you seem to imply, wash it clean with a lukewarm pink solution of permanganate of potash crystals, dry gently, and anoint with a little zinc ointment. Repeat the anointing daily until healed. If cuticle is seriously damaged, it is very doubtful whether any more feathers will be reproduced. She should still be good for breeding, but you cannot expect her to do so until the scalp is well. It is just likely she may be able to have one brood this year. Staple diet should be three parts Canary to one part summer rape. A little hemp, inga, teazle, millet, and maw in equal parts may be given separately every second day, and a scrap of egg food on the alternate days to bring them on for breeding. Omit the linseed altogether.

Deformed Toes (H. C. E.).—It is impossible to give you any definite advice in the absence of any knowledge as to which toes are deformed, and this you quite fail to convey. If a hind toe, put on a rubber band made by cutting in eighth of an inch from rubber tubing as used for feeding bottles, and give thin perches. The method of putting on the bands you will find fully described in several replies just lately. If one or both of the side fore toes, bring them forward and tie firmly, but not tightly, to the centre toe. If the centre toe also is turned under, then you can do nothing, but trust to the thin perches to gradually effect a cure, unless you looked up some back numbers and tried the effect of two mechanical contrivances which have appeared in the Illustrated Ideas for this trouble.

Wheezes and Squeaks (L. P.).—Look well into the position and surroundings of the bird, and see that it is quite free from exposure to cold draughts, extremes of heat and cold, foul air from burning lights, etc., etc. Does it hang in a window? If so, remove it at once to a position further in the room. When you have seen to all these points you may give in addition to the ordinary seed diet a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, with three drops of cod-liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar, every second day for a fortnight. In the drinking water give a small pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice for two days, and afterwards twenty drops of a mixture of two parts each glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and one part each ipecacuanha wine, and chlorodyne, every second day for a fortnight. Any chemist will mix you a small quantity of the above mixture ready for use.

Non-feeders (Troubled, Leeds).—I think you probably overdo the egg food at the beginning after the young are hatched. For the first day or two give this in quite small quantities, and fresh twice or three times every day. You do not say how you make your egg food, but you might with advantage try a mixture of equal parts egg, crushed stale sponge cake, and stale wheaten bread crumbs. You will find detailed instructions for rearing the young from time of hatching in one or more replies every week for several weeks past, which you might read with profit. See reply to "W. D. B.," also that to "J. McIlroy," last week. You make no mention of green food. You should begin to give this—not dandelion—when the young are three or four days old, and give it fresh, in small quantities at first, at least twice a day.

Sneeze and Scratch (Anxious).—Judging from your sketch the cages seem to be favourably placed, but whether this is so or not depends upon whether they are box cages, and also whether the doors open to the outer air or not, and you have not indicated this. The size of the kitchen is also omitted, and this, too, would affect the question, especially if small, which would bring the birds within range of the fire. I have little doubt the birds are either too near the fire or are in a draughty position. If the arrangement is feasible have the cages on the wall immediately opposite the fire, midway between the two doors, but you must have box cages and no others. Examine your cages well for red mites in the crevices and joints. Then give each pair a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cage with six drops of sherry and four of cod-liver oil emulsion, well mixed in it every second day for a week, and on the alternate days add twenty drops of whisky, six of oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil, to the drinking water, and shake well together. It is useless trying to breed with them until they are well.

Cocks and Hens (Railway Engine).—Am inclined to think the two birds mentioned are both hens. You should be able to tell now by the shape of the vent—that of the hen is flat and almost in a line with the abdomen, whilst that of the cock is prominent and pointed. You do not mention whether either of them sings or not. Your best method of telling which of the young Yorkshires are cocks is to observe them carefully, and note which make attempts at singing. The young cocks will begin to warble in an undertone almost as soon as they leave the nest. You would find "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d., post free, from our Manager, very useful to clear up these points. Sib hens are hen Canaries which have been bred together for several generations on lines of consanguineity—that is, by mating together blood relations. As regards price of birds, personally, I should expect nothing worth having at that price.

The Proper Thing (Lumen).—No, it is not essentially the proper thing to cover a bird's cage when gas is lit, but in your case, with the bird hanging in the window, it is probably just the thing which has preserved its life so long. By all means move it permanently to another position which is free from draught, and extreme heat and cold. The way it behaves when you go to cover it is simply due to increasing tameness. It would probably play with your finger if you offered it at such times, and would take very little trouble to tame thoroughly now it has reached this stage. The "cries" you say it gives when not covered as usual, are in all probability the sounds of chronic bronchial troubles, due to its position in the window. Try what twenty drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills and glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken in its water, every second day for a week, will do for it. There is no necessity whatever to cut the nails as long as they are not overgrown so as to be an hindrance to the bird's freedom of movement about its perches.

The Reason Why (Blue Egg).—The only reason I can give for the behaviour of the hen which rejected the abnormally coloured and shaped egg, and persistently turned it out of the nest, is that some subtle instinct convinced her it was a waste of time to sit upon it, as, indeed, the chances of such an egg hatching and producing a normal chick are quite infinitesimal. Some hens have idiosyncrasies of this kind and refuse to have anything to do with such abnormalities. As yours is evidently one of these cranky individuals, take the hint and leave her severely alone when the other eggs are hatched, or you may find that she refuses to have anything to do with the rearing of the young.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

A Curious Trio.

A. Jay.—Your questions astonish me. 1. It is sheer nonsense to say that a Cuckoo cannot be hand-reared to the age of three months. Only quite recently we published letters about, and photographs of, Cuckoos which were hand-reared, and lived and thrived for vastly longer periods of time. Why not "settle" your friend, and the wager, by showing these to him? Further, a Cuckoo was so hand-reared at my own house last spring. 2. I have myself frequently found Goldfinches' nests in trees other than the pear and the apple; oak, spruce, fir, and beech trees, also evergreens. 3. I thought the "old woman's tale" about the Cuckoo turning to a Hawk in winter was long ago effectually scotched. Most decidedly it is untrue; doesn't it sound like it? Your friend must have "rummy" ideas about bird life; I would suggest that you make him a present of a cheap handbook on British birds. 4. The egg you sent was not in a condition to be identified; it was smashed, and contained an embryo in a state of decomposition, so that I held my nose and hadn't the courage to approach it closely. You say you got them at Whitsuntide; I believe this.

Rearing Young Magpies.

Elvidge Bros.—I dealt very fully with this matter only some two weeks ago. Briefly, in hand-rearing a Magpie, if you mix finely-minced hard-boiled egg with an equal quantity of very stale bread crumb, and moisten it with new milk when feeding, you should get along all right. If you get several young ones, however, you will find it cheaper to use scalded and mashed up puppy biscuits (of best quality), with which you can mix the egg in the proportion of three parts biscuit to one of egg. You can give the youngsters mealworms and smallish garden worms, cut into suitable pieces, should also certainly be supplied. Also you can frequently chop up a piece of lean mutton or beef (mince it up finely) and give amongst the food; or a little tender cooked meat can be given. Personally, however, I fight shy of meat as much as possible (especially so for very young birds), for I am certain it upsets the stomach of most birds (sets up diarrhœa), especially when much is used raw. I prefer boiled or stewed rabbit flesh to all other, when obtainable. Mix a good big pinch of fine grit amongst the food now and again, or about half a teaspoonful of powdered cuttlefish bone. You can give the birds a drink of plain water after each meal, if you like. If any nestling should get a touch of diarrhœa (which is unlikely if you give the cuttlefish or grit), well mix a saltspoonful of prepared chalk powder (from any good chemist) amongst a portion of the food fed to it. Repeat after an interval, if it seems necessary. Keep the bird very clean.

Hen Bullie and Young.

J.W.S.—If the eggs hatch out, give the hen, to feed with, plenty of canary and summer rape seeds and lightly cracked hemp and sunflower seeds. Offer ripe seeding green foods, such as chickweed, shepherd's-purse, and groundsel, freely—but strip off all coarse leaves. If you cannot get this, give young lettuce and watercress leaves—but not freely until the youngsters are three or four days old. She may also relish a little soaked (just sprouting) rape. I don't use scalded rape; only that soaked in cold water, frequently changed. Don't give these things all at the same time, but offer them at various periods through the day. Egg bread, made by well mixing an equal quantity of crushed Osborne biscuits (or equal quantity of stale bread crumbs) with a minced hard-boiled (twelve minutes) egg, must, of course, also be freely offered if the hen shows a liking for it, and most of my own hen Bullies do so. Some of mine, too, like live ants' eggs, and a few mealworms now and again, while any branches of fruit, etc., trees covered with "smother fly" will be eagerly accepted.

Handrearing Greenfinches.

J. A. Edge.—This is also a hand-feeding question I have dealt with fully several times quite recently. Note back numbers. Briefly: I don't believe in taking any young Finches from their parents at too early an age; let them show their feathers nicely before you remove them. I would sooner have to "cram" them at first. Up to the twelfth day (from the 10th to 12th) is safe enough. The food to be used is the usual kind—that is, egg and biscuit. Crush two Osborne biscuits, and well mix with them a hard-boiled egg, using a fork to do this with, one with thin prongs. Mince the egg up finely and the whole can be passed through a potato "squeezer" (or masher). When feeding take the required quantity of this mixture, and make it the consistency of thin paste (or of cream) with new milk. See that it is always sweet and free from the slightest taint of sourness. The egg-food must be made fresh at least once daily. Often I put in a good pinch of Plasmon powder, which I am never without in my bird-room. A few small cut-up pieces of mealworm may be dipped in milk and popped into their mouths pretty frequently; likewise any house flies you can capture should be fed to them. As the youngsters grow, add a little soaked and just sprouting summer rape to the stock food. Steep the rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a cloth before mixing it in the food.

Brevities.

A Loss of Flight Feathers (Old Soldier).—Pleased to hear that my opinion as to the cause turns out to be correct. The birds will suffer no lasting ill-effects from the accident.

A Muling Matter (Paradox).—Let the hen Canary have the same seeds as the Goldfinch until she commences to sit. The method of proceeding with the Finch, which you outline, is correct.

Was it a Gale (A. Holloway).—I do not know any other bird than the Nightingale which answers to the description you give. The nest is built close to, or on, the ground, at foot of a thick bush, or in herbage, or among dead leaves, in spinneys, and is chiefly made of dead leaves (oak being the favourites) with dried grasses, rootlets, etc. The eggs are generally five in number (I have found four, and heard of six), and plain olive-brown in colour. Some have a bluish tinge.

Finch Eggs and Canaries (G.R.).—Yes; eggs of the Chaffinch, Greenfinch, etc., can be put under hen Canaries, and the latter will rear the young Finches on the same food stuffs as are used in the rearing of young Canaries or young Mules.

Bullfinches Eggs (C. R. Carr).—The eggs of the Bullfinch are greenish-blue, spotted, and sometimes blotched with dark brown to black, mostly at the large end. Books, with full coloured plates of eggs, are not exactly cheap; one of the latest published, and one of the very best, is "Eggs and Nests of British Birds," by Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S., price 5s. CAGE BIRDS would send you a copy; or you can get one through a bookseller. There are 32 plates of eggs in this, and many photographs of nests, etc.

A Lark (Novice).—It seems evident that the bird is falling into a moult, and you can do nothing beyond feeding it well and waiting patiently until it has assumed a new coat. The change in condition which you mention is doubtless the cause of the trouble. The bird will come into song again afterwards. For 10 or 12 days stir a small teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food (obtainable of any chemist) into the bird's drinking water, giving fresh twice daily, and in a glass or pot (not metal) vessel only.

Hen Chaffinch Sitting (Leinster).—If the pair are alone in the aviary, the hen Chaffinch will be quite likely to rear the young, especially if you offer her a good insectile food (with a little egg-food mixed amongst it), and plenty of seeding chickweek, shepherd's purse, groundsel, and the like, also live ants' eggs, which are now plentiful, and grand things to use. If there are many other birds in the aviary it would be safest to transfer the eggs to a hen Canary.

A White Dove (Nero).—Doves are not included in the list of exhibition birds published by the specialist British bird clubs; consequently, you would have to run the risk of getting your white, pink-eyed Turtle Dove "wrong classed." It is rare, and certainly interesting. You would be more likely to get light Mules (if at all) with a clear Norwich cock bred from clear parents; a variegated bird is not so suitable, being obviously full of green blood.

Insect Life (J. H. Bennett).—Earwigs are very good things to offer soft-billed birds, and you can also safely give them a chance to make a meal off any of the small crawling things you find about your garden plants; about the only things barred will be hairy caterpillars. You can depend on it that the birds will reject whatever they do not fancy; some, for instance, will eagerly eat live nuts, whereas others won't touch them.

Ants' Eggs (T. H. Welch).—The live ants' eggs sent are a good sample, quite up to anything I have seen. In the early nests the eggs are always very much larger than those obtained later on. I can quite believe that you enjoyed your outing in the woods; I would sooner have been with you than sweltering here in Fleet Street, you can bet on that. The recent decision in the law case will not stop the exhibiting of British birds; it is not quite so bad as this.

Identity of Egg (P.P.).—I must give it up. The egg is too large for the Hedge Sparrow (unless abnormal), and looks like the Whinchat, for though it is badly smashed, I seem to discern the very faint characteristic mottling; but, then, this bird does not build in a tree 12 to 14 feet from the ground. It is a matter of impossibility to identify many eggs; one needs to see the nest, and often the birdy owner, to make certain. It is not the egg of any Finch. I have known both Blackbird and Thrush to lay unspotted eggs.

Identity of Bird (Curious Querist).—This bird is the Lesser Whitethroat, one of our smallest Warblers, and, of course, an insectivorous bird. They make nice cage birds, and are not difficult for anyone to keep who has had experience of such Softbills as Nightingales, for they require feeding on the same lines, but with the addition of more ripe fruit. I do not advise you to try hand-rearing this species if you have had no experience; it is a delicate and tiresome task, for the youngsters are tender little things. Live ants' eggs would be the best food on which to rear them easily. The Lesser Whitethroat is not of much account as a show bird, being beaten by the rarer species.

For Woodlark's Cage (J. Walters).—I can quite believe that you find grit useless as a floor covering for the Woodlark's cage. Try either granulated peat-moss (broken up very small), obtainable from most corn and forage stores, or cocoa-nut fibre, obtainable from florists or seed merchants. You will have no trouble then, I think, through clogged feet. A dust bath should be provided, of course.

A Linnet (W.H.D.).—You can safely try the cock Linnet with one of the Canary hens, as from your description he seems to be in breeding condition (examination of the vent will soon decide this for you). Leave the hen without a mate for a few days before introducing the Linnet. Get the "Nutshell" handbook (post free, 2½d., from this office) on the Linnet, and this will tell you all about the correct feeding, tit-bits, etc.

Thrush Which Makes a Noise (S. S.).—Your query makes me smile. Really, having never kept fowls, I do not know what sort of a noise it is which a Hen makes when she "has the pip"—poor thing. It is difficult to advise you, but I presume the bird has a cold, in which case you will be likely to cure by stirring in each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water 8 drops of tincture of benzoin. This must be given in a glass or pot vessel, and mixed fresh twice daily. You must take the bird indoors during damp weather; also at nights until cured.

Linnet and Chaffinch for Muling (Dick Williamson).—You should buy the "Nutshell" booklet No. 2, which will tell you all about the correct feeding of the Linnet for song and breeding, at far greater length than I can do here (only 2½d., post free, from this office). You ought to get Mules from the Linnets if they are in the requisite high breeding condition. I question whether you will do any good with the Chaffinches, however, which are very doubtful Mule breeders with a Canary. I have never yet seen a Mule from Chaffinch and Canary, anyway. If you want to experiment, it would be interesting; but you appear to be out after "good eggs."

Cock or Hen Greenfinch (Anxious).—I suppose you mean by "green cock Linnet or hen," cock or hen Greenfinch. There is no such bird as a "green" cock Linnet; but the Greenfinch is commonly, but erroneously, termed the Green Linnet. The easiest way to breed Mules with a Canary is by means of the cock Greenfinch, which usually pairs very readily. The hen will also breed in a cage, but not with the same certainty, or ease of management.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., etc.

British and Foreign Hybrids.

Oiseaux.—I cannot call to mind any similar case. Leave them together just as they are, and if the young are hatched supply green food ad lib., such as chickweed, lettuce, grass in flower (seeding grass), and any non-poisonous weeds, also the usual seeds, a little soft food and some mealworms and gentles, and any other insects the garden supplies or you can procure for them. The main thing is to leave them as undisturbed as possible. Quite apart from the question of value, it is worth while making the attempt to bring off the cross, as it would be of great interest; but their method of feeding is rather dis-similar, and I fear complete success is somewhat improbable. Nevertheless, I should certainly make the attempt.

Aviary for Beginners.

Shepsliedite.—In an aviary of this size I should cover in 6ft. of the roof and also arrange for a 3ft. shed, which can be easily made by extending a partition from back to front, at the boarded-in end. I do not care for lilac in any aviary, but the privet and clematis can be left to grow inside, or a plant of each planted inside. I should fix up nest boxes, etc., under the roof, both in the shelter and covered portion of flight; suspend some from the roof, hang others on the walls. Well furnish the back of aviary, shelter and flight with twiggy branches, and so arrange baths and food vessels that the branches do overhang same, or their contents will be quickly fouled. You will have accommodation for about 30 birds the size of a Canary. "Foreign Birds for Beginners," from CAGE BIRDS office, will give you full directions as to feeding and treating, etc. As opportunity offers get pairs of the following: Grey and Green Singing Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Common and Green Avadavats, Zebra Waxbills, Zebra Finches and Cocks of Madagascar, and Napoleon Weavers. All the above will agree with Canaries. The best Britishers to put with above are Goldfinch, Siskin, Twite, Redpoll, Linnet, and Bullfinch. If you only put in hen Canaries and cocks of the British Finches you may get some interesting hybrids.

Nesting Receptacles for Cardinals

B. H. S.—You can leave in the breeding cage, but the Blackbird's nest would have been better fixed in the branches; however, leave it as it is now, and hang up a few moderate sized travelling cages with the wire front removed, also one or two Hartz travelling cages, with the fittings removed, and one or two bars cut away, to afford an entrance for the birds, and you can then safely leave them to choose for themselves. Why not fix a shallow box on the ledge in the roof of inner house, if they have a predilection to build there, the box would give them a base to build upon, and they would then make their nest secure. Success in breeding Foreign species is often attained by observing the birds, and helping them out when they appear in difficulty, as indicated above. I do not expect they will accept a ready-built nest, but will construct one for themselves once they have fixed upon a suitable site, according to their own ideas. There is another reply in this issue on rearing Cardinals, which will meet your need.

Budgerigars, etc.

Howard White.—(1) You have accommodation for about 30 Budgies in your aviary, but I should only advise you putting in four pairs for breeding purposes. (2) Yes, I think the White Javas would be able to look after themselves. In such an aviary if they help themselves to each other's dietary, it will do them no hurt. (3) Yes. (4) I prefer the ordinary soft food mixture to the one you are using. (5) Turn into the aviary an equal number of each sex, and leave them to sort themselves out. No, but they should not have access to the cages, or their choice may rest on the caged bird. Put them into the aviary straight away, and leave them to pair up for themselves. (6) Unless you keep so many Budgies that they simply swamp the place, I think the Javas will be able to look after themselves.

Breeding Red-crested Cardinals.

L. K. T.—You must be ready with a supply of live insects by the time the young birds are about due to hatch. These can consist of mealworms, gentles (well scoured), and live ants' cocoons (eggs). You can also give any spiders, beetles, smooth caterpillars, or other garden pests you can capture for them. In addition you must supply the usual dietary, viz., seeds, soft food, ripe fruit, and green-food. It will be better to give a supply of live insects about every two hours rather than leave in a large supply at once, though you could leave a fair supply of gentles about in a glazed vessel. The pupa or crysalis, is just as useful as the maggot for feeding purposes, but in hot weather the flies soon emerge once the pupa stage is reached. If there are not many insect-eating species kept with the Cardinals, it should not be much trouble to keep up a supply of live food, and the young should be successfully reared. I opine the eggs will be fertile. The kitchen blackbeetle (cockroach) will be greedily eaten if your kitchen is blessed (?) with these pests—put in a deepish glazed vessel very few will escape, and they can be offered at intervals. Kindly send an account to CAGE BIRDS for publication if you succeed.

Parrot with Parasites.

J. H. B.—I should give several doses of powdered Areca nut, about as much as would thinly cover a sixpence, with an interval of two days between each dose. But you must also use judgment according to the condition of the bird; and if the voidings become too loose and watery, you must lengthen the period between the doses. For a bird that will let me handle it, I always give it direct to the mouth, made into the form of a pellet, with a little jam, of which most Parrots are very fond. Failing this, there are two other methods, either damp a small piece of sponge or madeira cake with water and pick up the areca nut on this, or the cake may be smeared with a little jam and the areca nut will adhere thereto; or, again, I have stirred the powder into a little boiled maize, but either the cake or the pellet are the best methods.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free, a mine of information of use and interest.

By one of the above methods you should have no difficulty in inducing your bird to take the remedy. After three doses you had better report progress. The voidings should be at once removed and destroyed, burnt if possible, and the most scrupulous cleanliness practised. Even if it occasions a little waste, the bird should be prevented from picking up food from the sand tray; this can be accomplished by closely wiring the cage grating. The cage should be thoroughly washed once or twice weekly with a five per cent. carbolic acid solution.

Brevities.

Budgerigars Not Agreeing (Henpecked).—I should certainly procure another hen, and not put them together till the cock is in fair plumage again, though it will be as well to keep them in sight of each other while he is coming into condition. With such weather as at present it should not take long for him to reproduce his plumage. Part them at once, as probably she is also pulling out the pen feathers as they appear, and it will only prolong matters to let this go on.

Keeping Grey Parrots Together (Mann).—I cannot advise the practice of keeping two Parrots in the same room; they are of such jealous dispositions, and I fear it would spoil the temper of both birds, though I am bound to admit in one case I have seen it done with fair success. If you make the attempt you be careful and give the precedence always to your first bird, and by this means you may avoid undue jealousy. It was by this arrangement that the above-mentioned instance was successfully carried out. I should not purchase a bird at all troubled with asthma; it will get worse as the bird increases in age, and should advise you to have nothing to do with such a bird.

A Showy Bird (Mrs. H. B. B.).—The Blue Grosbeak is a handsome bird, yet not gorgeous, and would do well on much the same treatment as the Green Cardinal. I do not think a Troupial would quite meet your case, as set out in your query. I really think a Gold-fronted Green Bulbul would suit you best, and I should suggest your purchasing it at once, so as to have an opportunity of getting it really fit and steady for the show season, but I rather doubt your getting one for 25s. Failing this, try and get either a Maroon, Blue, or Tri-colour Tanager. Tanagers should have a diet of ripe fruit, soft food, and a few live insects, with the addition of milk sop; this would suit the Bulbul also—whichever you are able to procure, the sooner you get it the better. Re your "P.S.," a Troupial is more an aviary than a cage bird, and some individuals never become really steady.

Grey Parrot in Poor Plumage (Ayr).—It is your diet that is at fault. I write almost every week—Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops (by this I mean bread or biscuit moistened in same), table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts (walnuts are as good as any), plain biscuit, any kind, and it can be moistened with water if the bird so prefers it; keep a piece of cuttlefish in the cage, and mingle a little grit with its seed mixture. Give one or two doses of Dinneford's Magnesia (one part magnesia to three parts water) with a couple of days between each dose, though the bird's condition must regulate this. Paint any bare parts with Spratt's Pennacura, and spray twice a week with quassia solution. Baize or cretonne makes a good covering for a cage; it should be covered all round the sides, but a good portion of the top should be left uncovered for ventilation. When not giving the magnesia, well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue this for some little time.

Parrot with Heated Skin (T. H. Harrell).—It is the diet that is wrong—"a bit of everything at mealtimes"—will soon upset any Parrot, and it will take some time to right the mischief. Give every other day at first, a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia (one part magnesia to three parts water), but you will have to let the state of the bird's bowels regulate the period between the doses—the bowels must be kept moving freely. After the first week, on the days you are not giving the magnesia, well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. Paint the bare parts with compound tincture of benzoin. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts in variety, and a little plain biscuit; this may be moistened (not saturated) with either plain water or the chemical food water only. Tea, coffee, or milk sop, table scraps, or animal food of any kind must not be given, or you will merely aggravate the trouble.

Amazon with Swollen Tongue (W. Kent).—Another case of wrong dietary; give a bird tea, coffee, and milk menus, etc., and it will soon go wrong. Keep its bowels well regulated with Dinneford's Magnesia; see other replies for dose, etc. Its diet should be confined to boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day, and it need not be given every day), seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts in variety, and plain biscuit; this can be moistened with plain water or water well coloured with Parrish's Chemical Food. The bird must be gradually accustomed to water; give it a few sips several times daily, gradually increasing the quantity you permit it to take, and when you see it will only drink a normal quantity it can be left continuously in the cage. Paint the tongue twice daily with honey and borax (from any chemist ready mixed); use a camel-hair brush for the purpose, and it must be well cleansed after each occasion.

Is It Moulting? (Mrs. Maconechy).—Many Parrots are moulting at the present time, and this is probably the case with yours. Your diet is not varied enough, and I should persevere with the effort to induce it to take fruit—try it with apple cores; also give it plain biscuit, and I think if you get a few shelled walnuts the bird will soon appreciate them. It is altogether wrong to feed the bird entirely on sunflower seeds; give the following mixture: Two parts each canary and millet seeds, and one part each hemp, oats, and sunflower seeds. Fill the tin up each morning, and do not give a fresh supply (that is on the same day) so long as any seed is in the tin. You have done quite right to regulate the bowels with Dinneford's Magnesia, and you had better continue to do so. When not giving the magnesia, well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food.

PARK AND LAKE AVICULTURE.

Rearing Pheasants.

Cymro Bach.—Pheasants should be reared on the same lines as chickens, allowing for the fact that greenmeat and animal food are more indispensably necessary. At first give a mixture of hard-boiled egg (pressed through a sieve or piece of zinc) with stale bread or biscuit crumbs, dried ants' eggs, and dried flies, and chopped lettuce, watercress, or onion tops; also canary and millet seed. Then, in two or three weeks, as they get older and stronger, some less expensive food, such as chopped "cat's meat," boiled crissel, and poultry meal made up crumbly, can be gradually used, and the smaller sorts of grain. Green food must always be given, unless they are kept on grass; and if you can supply some well-scoured gentles, these will be of great use in helping them along. Remember that the eggs take two or three days longer than hens' eggs to hatch, and clip the birds' wings when fledged if in an open run.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

E.A.W. (Plumstead).—Your birds have been dying of a contagious disease. Read answer to "F.J.W.S." in last week's number; it is a parallel case. Your losses have been indeed heavy, and you have left it rather late for treatment to be of any benefit. It is scarcely worth while attempting treatment with the three remaining birds. If not of much value I should destroy them, disinfect cages, etc., with pure carbolic acid, five per cent. solution, and thoroughly scrub with boiling water and soap. Then place them by to commence with a clean sheet next breeding season. On no account buy any fresh birds, for so long as you do you will be carrying on the disease. If, however, you think my treatment too drastic, and feel inclined to doctor them, then I shall be pleased to advise you further.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Bird Photography (Bird Photo).—We published a lengthy article some years ago dealing with bird photography, but the numbers containing it are now out of print, unfortunately. Thanks for your kindly remarks.

Outsides of Cages (Novice).—Any quick-drying black varnish, obtainable from good oil and colour stores, is excellent for renovating the outside woodwork of cages of all kinds; directions for use will be found on the bottles. It is quite easy to apply.

Article and a Plate (Julius).—(1) The article was concluded in our issue dated Jan. 22, 1910. (2) The coloured plate "A Group of Gems from Foreign Climes" was presented with our last special Birthday Number, dated Jan. 15.

A White Thrush (H. D.).—A white pink-eyed Thrush is certainly unusual, but many similar cases have been known, and many white Thrushes have been exhibited at the shows in various parts of the country. Its value depends largely upon its condition; anything from a sovereign upwards might be obtained for the bird.

Canaries Which Have Bred for Fifteen Years.

Is it a Record?

SIR,—I am a reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, but I have nover seen it stated that any man has got a pair of Canaries 17 years old, which have been breeding for 15 years, and have young ones now. I don't know if that is a record or not. This pair are to be seen any day in Ramsey.

Egg-laying Records of Bullfinch Hens.

SIR,—I may inform readers that egg-laying records, like Mr. Sharp's, have been quite common in the past. I have had several that laid from 30 to 40 in one season. I had one that laid 38 the first year, and 30 the second. On the third and fourth 8 each, and out of all these eggs there was not one fertile, although I tried her with the best breeding Finches I had. In my experience hens that lay so many eggs are useless for hybrid breeding. I find the ones that lay from 10 to 15 are the best. I had one last year that laid only 7—4 in the first nest and 3 in the second, and they were all fertile. I also remember that famous breeder and judge, Mr. Robert Smellie, having a Bullfinch hen that laid 46 in one season. That was nearly 20 years ago.

JOHN GOODFELLOW.

Mule Breeding with American Birds.

SIR,—I saw a paragraph in CAGE BIRDS last week from the pen of Mr. J. Burrows, of California, U.S.A., in which he says he has some grand Norwich Canaries. I wish him every success with them. He also goes on to say he is trying a few crosses for Mule breeding from Californian Linnets and Goldfinches with Norwich hens. He says: "If I succeed, I suppose it will be the first time such Mules will have been bred." It might interest Mr. Burrows to know that such will not be the case, as both of the above-mentioned crosses have been bred at Nanaimo, B.C., Canada. The Goldfinch he speaks of as being black and gold in colour is a very beautiful little bird, about the size of the European Siskin; it also has white bars in wings and tail, with a black cap, all body feathers being a bright yellow, legs and beak yellow, and is the best songster I have heard in Canada. It has a very wide range. In all its habits it resembles the Goldfinch, feeding on thistles, etc. The nests I have found were built in maple trees, in the forks of the branches, and they are very plentiful on the mainland in and around Vancouver City. Two friends of mine obtained this cross from Canary hens in the above-named city in 1907 and 1908, and I may say the Mules were very pretty, and good songsters. With regard to the Californian Linnet or Purple Finch, which is its proper nafe, it is another very interesting bird, and very numerous all over Canada and the U.S.A. It is about the size of a British Greenfinch. Its colours are brown back, wings and tail, with blood red breast and head in the male birds. The hens are grey breasted. This birds also has a little song, but nothing to recommend it as a songster. A cross was obtained from one of these in Nanaimo, B.C., in 1906 or 1907 (I am not certain). It was paired up with a small crested German or Chinese Canary hen. They hatched and reared two Mules, one of the young Mules having a small crest, same as the mother. I have at the present time a cock Purple Finch or Californian Linnet flying in a large outside Aviary along with hen Canaries, hen Bullfinches, and hen Chaffinches, and hen Bramblefinches, and he is paired up to a hen Canary. I will let you know later on if there is any result. I shall be interested to hear if Mr. Burrows succeeds with his birds, and wish him a successful breeding season.

Proposed Specialist Norwich Canary Club in the North.

SIR,—A meeting will be held on Wednesday, June 15th, at 8 p.m. prompt, in Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms, 65, Grainger Street (near Monument), ro forming the above specialist club for tho Northern Counties, when I hope every fancier interested in the Norwich will attend, if possible. Those who cannot attend, and wishing to join, if they just send their names and addresses to me, and any suggestions as to the working of the abovo club, I will only be too pleased to lay them before the meeting. I have already over 20 names as joining same.

A Remedy Wanted for Asthma.

SIR,—Some time ago (six weeks) I bought a pair of Yorkshire Canaries, paying as good a price as I could afford. A week ago the cock developed what appeared to be asthma, and the next morning was dead. Two days after the hen had the same disease, and is only just alive at tho time of writing. I have noticed that your readers are always ready to give advice to novices like myself, and I thought perhaps someone would tell me a remedy for this peculiar and evidently contagious disease, as I am at a loss to know what to do. The bird afflicted seems troubled in its breathing, and occasionally chokes, and makes a wheezing noise.

CAPTAIN STARLIGHT.

Mules Bred from a Mule.

SIR,—A few weeks ago there appeared in CAGE BIRDS a letter from Mr. John M. Murray, Sunderland, stating that he had succeeded in bereding from a cock Linnet-Canary mule paired with a hen Canary. I have seen Mr. Murray, and have arranged with him to have the young birds bred from the above pair on view at our Young Bird Show, which is to be held on Saturday evening, June 11, in the smoke-room of the Fawcett Street Cafe, Sunderland. I have not seen the birds myself, so I cannot offer any opinion on them; but Mr. Murray informed me, after I had questioned him closely, that there was no doubt about the case being genuine. However, the birds will be examined at the show, and, as a show-room is a good place for the purpose, I cordially invite any fanciers who are interested in the case to visit the show, which is free of charge. I might add that I shall probably arrange to have the father of the birds (the cock Linnet-mule) on view at the same time.

Can Hybrids be Produced from Softbilled Birds?

SIR,—For many years I have given this subject my serious thought—Can Softbilled birds be induced to breed in confinement with other species of their kind? Larks and Nightingales have been bred in aviaries with their species. Could they be induced to breed with others? I dare say this subject has not been thought out by aviculturists, as they have not often the convenience to try these birds, or there are now so many of them kept in confinement for show purposes only. A trial might be made with some of the most likely ones to get them to mate in large outdoor aviaries. The Blackbird and Thrush, or vice versa, have, I believe, crossed in an aviary, so it is quite possible some of the smaller birds would so so, as their food is somewhat similar when at large. Take for instance the Wagtails; these birds are easily kept in cages, and if given plenty of room might cross with each other—the Grey or Pied with the Yellow, or vice versa. Then there are the Redstart, Nightingale, Blackcap, and Warblers. Those who have females of any species might give them their liberty in an aviary for the season, starting in May when the weather is more congenial. The Bunting might also be tried, and the Larks. A start might be made in a small way with one or two pairs, and the results published to give others a guide. It would interest a large number of your readers to read the results of these trials. Some years ago I tried a Robin and a Hedge Sparrow with a large number of mixed British birds, but tho results were nil, as the aviary was much too overcrowded to secure any breeding results. It would always be advisablo not to overcrowd in any way. I hope these few lines may bo the means of opening up a discussion on the breeding of these birds in aviaries. Some 3 or 4 years ago I was told by one who well understands birds, that he had seen somo wild hybrids of the Reed Sparrow and House Sparrow, flying about where he was at work, but I could not take that in, as hybrids with birds in a wild state are extremely rare, and most improbable. I thought at the time that they were immature young.

A Wonderful Napoleon Weaver.

His Twentieth Birthday.

SIR,—It is exactly twenty years to-day (June 5th) since I purchased my little Napoleon Weaver, and he is still in my possession, well and happy. I take this to be a long life for a small bird in captivity, especially one of foreign extraction, and I, therefore, thought it might interest somo of the readers of your valuable paper, at all events those in the "Foreign Fancy," and I should much like to know if any can beat the record of my old Bishop.

Green Food or No Green Food?

And Six Young Out of Three Eggs.

SIR,—Respecting the letter about the rearing of young birds without green-food, from Mr. Folkard, it may interest readers to know that I have successfully reared young birds for many years without any green-food. Attention and common sense go a long way towards success in this. I live in the country, and have an unlimited supply of such food. But it seems to me a great many might have young birds if they studied the real wants of their birds and were not led by so-called experts' writing. It may be interesting to know that I had a hen with 6 young ones out of 3 eggs.

Breeding with Budgerigars and Cockatiels.

SIR,—Some time ago I wrote you an account of my early breeding experiences with Budgerigars and Cockatiels. I have had many correspondents who have mentioned that letter, so I thought perhaps a few notes on my doings since then might interest some of your readers. I think, up to the present, this has been one of my worst years, so far as breeding is concerned, but from the number of eggs I have found about to-day I stand a fair chance of making up for my earlier misfortunes. The old cock Cockatiel which I mentioned before has been nesting for weeks now, but his mate has not laid yet, although (this will surprise and interest many) two pairs of newly-imported ones, purchased about six weeks ago, will both have young ones by the time this is printed I hope. They are both sitting very steady in the same large aviary, together with other Cockatiels, Budgerigars, Lovebirds, Ringnecks, Doves, Mandarin Ducks, etc. My three Indian Runner Ducks have laid four eggs in one day on more than one occasion.

Notes for Beginners in the Canary Fancy.

SIR,—A new beginner in the Canary Fancy usually wishes to start as cheaply as possible. As regards the fitting-up of either the attic or spare bedroom (away from the sleeping room) with breeding cages. I am myself rather extravagant; I believe in double compartment cages, and, curious to say, I like to put one pair only in a double compartment cage. Then when successful in rearing a few young off that pair (say, nearly a month old), I open the slide door and let the young go through; thus they will have a sort of fresh department to go into—newly sanded, with seed box and water. Then it is a very easy matter to spend half-an-hour in thoroughly cleaning the first breeding place out, and allowing the same mother to occupy the same compartment again for her next venture for young separated from her offspring. Long before she has another lot of young you will have cleared the others to some other cage and prepared it again for the next brood to go through. Some fanciers may ridicule this idea; nevertheless it is my routine. Now, say our new beginner with Canaries obtained 4 double-compartment cages (perfectly new from some good maker; not secondhand ones), there then comes the little matter of placing them in the room. Here, again, I shall differ no doubt from other writers. I recommend four stone jam jars, large ones (paint them over if you wish); place two under either end of your first cage; then if you can afford it, obtain a sheet of good strong tin the size of the cage top, to project out only at the front 2 inches or more. Then place on top of this your second cage, and do the same again with another sheet of strong tin. Then, when your four cages are fixed up you feel somewhat proud all at once. Next comes your decision as to what particular breed of Canary you are really to give your mind to; be careful and let it be the final choice of your fancy. Then by enquiries and looking round your own town or countryside you will succeed in finding a breeder who will do all in his power to fit you up with 2 cocks and 4 hens. Then I think you will be in nice position for a good start when the breeding season is at hand, say, at the beginning of March. Then, to be successful, it mostly depends on the hens for their feeding qualifications, as is the case even with the oldest breeders we have to day. As for feeding your Canaries, I am a believer in white Canary seed and a little rape seed mixed always (I do not care for mixed seeds of five or six varieties). Also, as regards your water glasses; try to let them have fresh water every morning; wash out your water glasses once a week thoroughly with aired water; then rinse them through with cold, and refill them on your cages. Have your floor covered with oilcloth, and once a fortnight have the same washed with a solution of carbolic proper and water. I will say in conclusion that I think it is one of the most pleasant hobbies anyone could have, and if the beginner would take in my paper, CAGE BIRDS, every week, he would get every detail about them it is possible to wish for.

COCKATOO.

Seven Eggs in Seven Days.

SIR,—Being a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, I should like to know if any of your readers have had the following experience in Canary breeding. I have a Norwich Plainhead hen that has laid 7 eggs in one week, and is now sitting on them. They are due to hatch on the 12th. I used no egg food, but only Spratt's cod-liver oil food, with a pinch of German rape, haw, sugar, and salt, and also plain canary seed. I would like to hear from any fancier who has had a like experience of 7 eggs in 7 days.

Call Birds and Trap Cages.

SIR,—I would like to ask Mr. C. Barnard a question re his bird trap, a sketch of which appeared in CAGE BIRDS a fortnight back. Does he use a call bird for such a trap; if not, what bait is required? I should also like to ask the same gentleman, or any other person who is familiar with the art of bird catching, if it is practical to catch Linnets with a call bird and trap cage.

CURIOUS QUERIST.

The Future of the Cage Bird Union.

What is it to be?

SIR,—Following my letter, which appeared in your issue of May 7th, I have addressed one to all societies affiliated to the Union last year, and who have not renewed their subscription, asking for their support, and also for suggestions for the betterment of the Union, either by modifying the rules or otherwise. The same letter has been sent to those societies also that have notified their secession, but also asking them to reconsider their decision, and to acquaint me with the reason of their withdrawal, with a view to the causes being remedied. I have already received a number of subscriptions and encouraging replies, tending to show that the Union has not come to such a crisis in its career as would appear from the correspondence appearing in your paper. I also intimated that I hoped to be able to come to same arrangement with the Yorkshire Union, and am now in communication with the secretary of this body, and trust before long to be in a position to announce a satisfactory arrangement with them to have the Y.U. shows open to our members. I have carefully noted all the letters on the subject of the Union which have been written recently, and intend to lay any proposals given before the Council for their consideration.

GEO. W. F. LYTHGOE, Secretary.

SIR,—The Newcastle Society has no right to expect, much less demand, to know how many of the Council were present when my notice of motion was taken. As a Councilman I was only answerable to the District Committee, and to the Newcastle Society as their delegate on the District Committee. If the Council consider the existence of the Union depends on Newcastle being gratified (I don't), then they may supply the information. Mr. Crawhall says mutual recriminations can do no good. Recriminations are part of the means whereby we find the true state of society, and the character of the individual. As to the Union's misdeeds, I have requested Mr. Crawhall and Mr. Reid to lay them bare as far as No. 1 District is concerned, and myself as representative. I have gone through Mr. Reid's column, and can find nothing but two points which may bring what he knows. The one is, he "merely stated what were known facts." The other, "had Mr. MacPartling been as consistent in his efforts to make the Union more popular as I have been in my endeavour to allow it a fair trial," etc. If he will be good enough to state plainly and precisely what he has in his mind, instead of generalising, I will be in a position to answer for the district and myself, as far as I can. As he says he has no ill-feeling toward me, I will allow his banter to pass. G. W. MACPARTLING.

SIR,—I am surprised at Mr. Crawhall's reply to my letter, especially after telling me that he owed me a debt of gratitude he could never repay. I have not misrepresented Mr. C. in any way, and if this is his method of repaying a debt, it is risky to give him much credit. With regard to asking Mr. Storey to stand as secretary for the Northern Federation, my account of the proceedings at the N.B.B.M. and F.B.C. meeting was quite correct, though I did not mention Mr. Storey. Mr. Crawhall said, "The difficulty is to get a secretary. If we could get a secretary he could call a meeting of the different societies." Addressing Mr. Storey he said, "I thought you would be the very man to take it." Now I will take Mr. Storey's word for it, and ask him to correct me, if the above is not as accurate as possible. I am quite aware Mr. Crawhall was not the originator of the Federation idea, but there can be no harm in asking who was? The proposers of the scheme have a right to take office, and it would be much fairer than trying to put it on to Mr. Storey. Mr. C. must mean the originators of this Federation when he mentions "the black hordes of unjustness," and though he holds the light they will not leave their darksome caves to take the post of secretary. As Mr. C. has it, "They quail before the light of publicity." Now Mr. Crawhall, taking into consideration the long friendship you wrote of, and that little debt of gratitude, whatever it may be, would it be too much to ask you to be reasonable? If they do not mean business, will you, as secretary of one of the leading societies, call a meeting of Northern secretaries to see if it is not possible to reconstruct the C.B.U. so that it may be acceptable to the majority? Mr. Taylor has approached you, Mr. Reid is willing, and you are anxious to have a ruling body, whether C.B.U. or otherwise. Newcastle, Gateshead, and Sunderland, the three leading societies, and Wallsend and Blaydon, were always in favour of C.B.U. till recently, and I am sure would send representatives to any meeting called for the purpose of reconstruction. If a satisfactory arrangement could be come to, it would be the means of overcoming many difficulties, and establishing a bond of interest in the welfare of each successive show, besides healing old sores, which only need a commonsense treatment to ensure a complete recovery. THOS. ROBSON.

SIR,—In that part of Mr. Reid's letter which refers to myself, there is not much which calls for an answer. He says that I prefer to be sarcastic and humorous rather than answer his direct question re staining. I thought I had answered it, but perhaps I did not fully explain myself. However, here goes for another try. To prove my assertion that it is no crime to stain a bird, I am quite willing to confess that I have a bird in my possession at the present time which has been stained. Why it is stained, and for what purpose, I, for obvious reasons, refuse to say. If it is a crime to stain a bird, I stand self-confessed, waiting for Mr. Reid to take action. Further, to prove my assertion that it is no crime to sell a stained bird, I am quite willing to sell the said bird to Mr. Reid; but I shall not be fool enough to give a guarantee that it is a natural plumaged one. Mr. Reid wants to know why the C.B.U. can't get at the seller of the stained bird to Mr. Birchley. I will give him five reasons why they can't touch him. First, because the mere fact of a man having a stained bird in his possession is not a crime. Secondly, the selling of a stained bird, as long as he doesn't give a written guarantee that it is in its normal plumage, is no crime. Thirdly, because he, like Mr. B., could swear that the said bird came into his possession in the state in which it was found when disqualified—that is, failing eye-witnesses to the faking process. Fourthly, because the crime is not in the selling of a stained bird, but in the exhibiting of a stained bird with the intention of taking advantage over other and more honest exhibits. Fifthly, because in all probability, the seller at the time (being a non-exhibiting fancier) wasn't a member of the C.B.U. (if he was, more fool he, considering the present rule 22); therefore the C.B.U. had nothing to do with him. The only person to get at him was Mr. B. himself, through the law courts. Then he would have to produce his written guarantee. I hope I have satisfied even Mr. Reid. The facts are incontrovertible. I have offered to sell Mr. Reid a stained bird to prove my assertion that it is no crime, and have confessed (although it is not a thing to proclaim from the housetops) to having one in my possession. It is lucky for me I am using an assumed name, else my character is gone. But I warn Mr. Reid that if he exhibits this stained bird, he will come within the law of the new Northern Federation which I see is in the process of hatching. Whether it (the Federation) will be reared till it gets on hard seed, or whether it dies of inflammation, remains to be seen. Anyhow, I hope the C.B.U. will still go on without the Northern section. Perhaps they will pull through, perhaps not. Anyhow, they will be free from at least one contaminating influence. I have answered Mr. Reid's questions at some length without being either sarcastic or humorous. I have confessed to dishonesty, and have given away my character; but I will be hanged if I will submit to the dastardly attack on my honour and reputation without a murmur. I refer to Mr. Reid's accusation that I am humorous. I would remind him that I am in the way of being a Scotsman. I have the blood of some of the best Scotch families in my veins through my wife's maiden aunt. Fancy anyone accusing a Scotsman of being humorous! Ugh! It's enough to drive one to matrimony. T. JOHNSON.

SIR,—There does appear to be a slight discrepancy in the two statements referred to by "Fortiter Defendit Triumphans," otherwise I would not have referred to Mr. Crawhall's case again. I think, however, that a perusal of my letter of May 21st will convince your correspondent that the discrepancy is more imaginary than real, for I clearly stated that where Mr. Crawhall made the mistake was in "thinking that the C.B.U. would not mind him showing at that particular show," and not because he did not know that the show was an unlicensed one. Your other correspondent, Sir, Mr. Johnson, evidently understood what I meant, and apparently he thought I knew what I was writing about, otherwise I feel sure that he would not have allowed to slip any possible chance of catching me tripping. The second question raised practically answers itself, and to most of your readers the explanation will be quite obvious. When Mr. Crawhall made his entries he thought the Union "would not mind," etc., and it would be after he found that the Union did mind, and that his case had to be brought forward, that he would say he was prepared to bear the punishment. That is all the explanation required, and I trust your correspondent is now satisfied, and I regret his inability to place a correct construction on a sentence should lead him to say that other writers "do not seem to know what they are writing about." As I stated in a previous letter, these expressions are bad enough when the writer's name is signed, but they are much worse, and far more contemptible, when written over a nom-de-plume, and, I might say, Sir, that for the future I do not intend to reply to any letters that are written over nom de-plumes, whether their tone be friendly or otherwise. In regard to the C.B.U., may I offer another suggestion? Rule 22 has been given a fair trial, and in the opinion of many fanciers has not been found satisfactory. May I suggest that the Executive Council seriously consider the advisability of trying the Union for at least two seasons without the rule. It would at least prove whether or not the Union could stand without the rule, and I am sure that if the Council would recommend such a course to be adopted it would be conducive to much greater harmony and good feeling than at present exists among fanciers, and would be the principal means of bringing the seceding societies back into the Union. This would also remove the chief obstacle which prevents a working arrangement being come to with the Yorkshire Union. The e appears to be a proposal on foot to allow C.B.U. members to exhibit at Yorkshire Union Shows, but I question very much whether the C.B.U., as a body, will sanction this. C.B.U. members residing in other counties have just as much right to be released from the strictures of Rule 22 as the members of Yorkshire societies, who desire to show at Yorkshire Union shows, and it would be obviously unfair if Yorkshire Union shows were to be open to C.B.U. members, while other unaffiliated shows in other parts of the country were not. Should the Executive Council wish to test the feeling of their members before taking the step that I have suggested, they could easily do so by forwarding a sheet to each society, and requesting the secretary to see that every individual member records his opinion of the rule. It will, of course, be clearly understood that I am referring only to the latter part of the rule. W. REID.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, the City Hotel, Wine-street, June 1st, Mr. W. Manley presiding over a splendid attendance. The classification for the first feather and British bird show, to be held at headquarters on July 2nd, was decided on, viz., 11 Canary, 3 Mule, and 8 British—22 classes in all. Mr. Fletcher then read a very interesting paper on his experiences of hybrid breeding, which was very much enjoyed, and an instructive discussion followed. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Fletcher, on the proposition of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Tilly.—MISS L. G. BYERLEY, Sec.

CITY OF GLASGOW O.A.

Half-yearly general meeting took place last month, Mr. Black, president, in the chair, supported by Mr. Geo. Marlin, vice-president, and a fair attendance of members. The principal business was the classification and election of judges. Mr. Jas. McFarlane moved that the Scotch Fancy classes 1 to 16 be under two heads—8 classes for young birds and 8 old birds. After a long discussion it was carried that the classes remain as at present. Agreed that the Belgian classes be reduced to two, namely, cock and hen. A long discussion took place on the nonfed Norwich classes, with the object of reducing them to two instead of four, but Mr. Marlin very pluckily guaranteed four classes, and they were retained. In the unflighted classes it was agreed that we make them into four, two for cocks and two for hens. Agreed that we add a class to the Yorkshire section, and proposed that classes 87 and 88 be amalgamated, but Mr. Malcolmson promised to guaranteed them, and they remain. Judges were then nominated, and the acceptances are: — For Scotch Fancy: John Hannah, Dumfries; John Dalgliesh, Leith; James Carlaw, Falkirk; James Ward, Glasgow; Geo. Fulton, Partick; John Park, Govan. Norwich Plainhead: A. G. Cameron, Kelso; and Alex. McFarlane. Glasgow. Crest and Crest-bred: John McLay, Kirkintilloch. Mules, British and Foreign: Peter Pettigrew, Glasgow; and Robert Bald, Bathgate. Border Fancies: William Haddow, Hamilton; and Wm. Mossic, Ambank, Ayr.

Great Harwood & District C.B.S.

We had our annual ramble on May 22nd, when about forty members and friends turned out. Leaving the town gate at 9 a.m., we were soon passing the cricket ground and out into the fields. The first nest to be found was that of the Thrush with four eggs; next the Meadow Pipit's, Blackbird's, Peewit's, Waterhen's, Common Wren's, Willow Wren's, Redpoll's, Chaffinch's, and a Snipe's. We were now nearing "Old Langho," where we partook of a little refreshment. Resuming our journey, we crossed the Ribble at Dinkley Ferry and on to Hurst Green and Stonyhurst. After staying a little while at this historic place with its world-famed college, we resumed our journey through Winkley Hall Grounds, where the Peacocks were greatly admired by the party. Recrossing the Ribble at Hacking Boat and leaving Whalley on our left, we had a stiff climb before reaching home at about 7.30, bringing to a close one of the best outings we have ever had.—W. T. MATTINSON, secretary.

Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.

Annual country ramble took place on May 29th, to Dorking and the surrounding country. The morning broke damp and cloudy, but 23 enthusiastic bird lovers met at Rye Lane station, and travelled to Box Hill in a special reserved carriage attached to the 9.32 train. On reaching Box Hill an hour or so later, a start was at once made for Ranmore Common, Mr. Botting leading. The first bird to be seen on the way was master Greenie, whose nest was soon found with 5 eggs. On reaching the common the party the party spread out amongst the bushes and trees, and many of the more familiar birds were soon seen and their nests found. Many nests of the Linnet were found in the gorse bushes. We also came across the Chaffinch's nest, also those of the Hedge Sparrow, Blackcap, Turtle Dove, Thrush, and Blackbird, most of the nests containing eggs or young ones. The Yellowhammer and Wood Warbler were heard, and a pair of Jays and the Cuckoo were seen; and one portion of the party came across a nest of young Pheasants. It was now close on 1 p.m., when a halt was called for the purpose of photographing the party, the picture being taken by Mr. Reeks. After we had all faced the camera, a start was made for Dorking, where lunch was waiting. What a splendid panorama spread itself out before us on our way into Dorking! Probably no spot in all England has more natural charms than this particular part of Surrey; the scene that met our eyes was simply entrancing. A cold luncheon had been provided at the Temperance Hotel, to which the party did ample justice. The ramble in the fresh country air had whetted the appetite. At 3 p.m., a start was again made for the fields and bushes, Mr. Botting leading the party by way of the Redlands to Holmwood Common. The Common was simply "alive" with birds, hardly a bush being found without a nest of some description. Other nests seen, mostly containing eggs, were those of the Whitethroat, Blackcap, Red-backed Shrike, Bullfinch, Willow Wren, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, etc. The Nightjar was heard, and the Cliff Chaff, Green Woodpecker, Pied Wagtail were seen. It was with reluctance the party had to leave this lovely spot, but the clock in the old church tower close by striking six reminded us that time was getting short. Striking the main road, the party were soon back in Dorking, and repaired once again to the Temperance Hotel, where mine host had provided a splendid tea which, after a wash and brush up, the party thoroughly enjoyed, and were freshened thereby for their journey to town, after one of the most thoroughly enjoyable, interesting, and instructive outings ever organised by the society. The gentlemen present were: Messrs. L. J. Richardson and Son, C. Botting, H. W. Tomsett, H. Brown, J. Cole, D. Reeks, J. Johnson, W. H. Smith, H. S. Grahame, C. Austin, G. Nichols, W. B. Cracknell, A. Cunningham, W. Hodson, J. Robson, G. J. Warley, W. Draxler, J. Silverthorn, J. Hazell, E. S. Lugg, M. Wickens, and a friend.—W. HODSON, hon. secretary.

Members F.F. Show, held June 4th. A splendid lot of young birds were staged in the Norwich classes. Mr. R. Vertigan put down a very nice team, also Messrs. W. Holmes, C. H. Martin, J. Martin. Mr. J. Driver judged, and gave general satisfaction. It was no easy matter to divide the first four in the Norwich classes, which contained youngsters that will be heard of later on.

NOR. YEL.: 1, Barlow; 2, Vertigan; 3, Holmes; 4, Martin; vhc, Holmes; hc, Martin; c, Simpson. BUFF: 1, Vertigan; 2, Holmes; 3, Martin; 4, Martin; vhc and hc, Gibson. YORKS: 1 and 2, Mitchell. BRIT. HARDBills: 1, Goldfinch, Turner; 2, Bullfinch, Glasby; 3, Greenfinch, Williamson; and res., Bullfinches, Alossenden. The judging competition proved a most interesting item of the evening, for Mr. Driver did not think there was a member who could place the winner in the Norwich classes, as it was so keen; but there proved to be one member who did place one winner, Mr. Holmes, who succeeded in winning the prize; Mr. Simpson came second, 3 points behind the winner; T. Barlow and J. H. Mitchell tied for third honours, 4 points from the winner.—J. H. MITCHELL, Hon. Sec.

HULL C.B.S.

First nest feather show of the season June 6th, at the Oddfellows' Hall, a grand entry of 93 being received. Mr. T. Perkins judged champion classes, and Mr. Jesse Calam the novice, both gentlemen's awards seeming to give every satisfaction. But with such a large entry very little time is left for members to look at the exhibits unless they stay until the early hours of the morning, as it was impossible to get the judging over before 9.45. Some grand specimens were on view, and it was one of the most successful nest feather shows ever held by the society.

ROYAL CORNWALL (St. Ives).

This the most popular of the far Western summer shows was this year held at St. Ives, on June 8th and 9th, and attracted a good average entry of high-class exhibits. The Norwich were a capital lot for type, whilst quality of feather was also well represented, especially in the exhibits of Messrs. Trevenna, Collins, Ferrill, and Strout. Yorkshires made a nice show, and some very racy, typical birds were shown by Messrs. Thomas, Wills, and Boundy. Scots were just fair in numbers and quality, but the Cinnamons were of high merit. In Mules Mr. Collins' splendid team kept quality at high-water mark. The British were a grand collection, especially the Goldfinches and A.O.V. small. In the Goldfinches all three prizes went to exhibitors outside the county. This is somewhat an unusual occurrence at Cornish shows, as the local fanciers usually hold a very strong hand in Goldies. The total entry was 172, being slightly in excess of the figures at St. Columb in 1909. Mr. W. A. Sandrey, the hon. sec. of the section, was most energetic and courteous, and he and his committee were most assiduous in their efforts to do all they possibly could for the benefit of exhibits and exhibitors. The sectional committee was composed of the following gentlemen: Messrs. L. E. Comley (chairman), R. Chard, T. Honey, J. Nicholls, R. Stevens, A. Ward, H. Couch, W. Pearce, W. P. Uren, and Brooks. Mr. J. Robson judged.

THE RECENT SENSATIONAL LAW CASE.

£5 Cash offered for the best essay entitled "Is it cruel to keep birds in cages?"

We are desirous of obtaining evidence in support of the practice of keeping birds in cages—evidence which rebuts the charge that it is cruelty to confine birds in cages—a charge only made by faddists and extremists, whose knowledge of the hobby in its best aspects is probably nil. With this object in view we offer a cash prize of Five Pounds for the best essay sent in to us on or before Wednesday, June 22nd next, dealing with the subject: "Is it Cruel to keep Birds in Cages?" and stating facts within the experience or knowledge of the writer which refute any such contention.

The rules are very simple:—

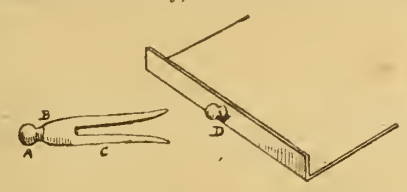
1. Essays need not exceed 1,000 words in length, and must be written or typed on one side only of each sheet of paper used.
2. Essays must reach us not later than first post Wednesday, June 22nd next.
3. The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS shall be accepted as final.
4. All essays sent in become the property of CAGE BIRDS.

Faults of spelling and grammar will not be counted against any essay.

Note: Rule 1 last week read: "Essays should not exceed," etc., which ought to have been, "need" not exceed, as the length is optional, though we do not necessarily want long articles.

Address all essays to the Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

We have to acknowledge the receipt of 6s. 6d. from the Darlington B.B.F.A., being a donation to the "Preston and Flowers Defence Fund." This brings the total subscribed to £63 8s. 11d. to date.



We were hoping to be in a position this week to say something concerning the course of action to be followed in endeavouring to safeguard the position of British bird hobbyists, and in combating the peculiar decision given in the recent law case, but circumstances which have arisen during the last few days render it inadvisable to do so just at this juncture. The matter is having close attention, and at the earliest opportunity readers will be made acquainted with the progress of events.

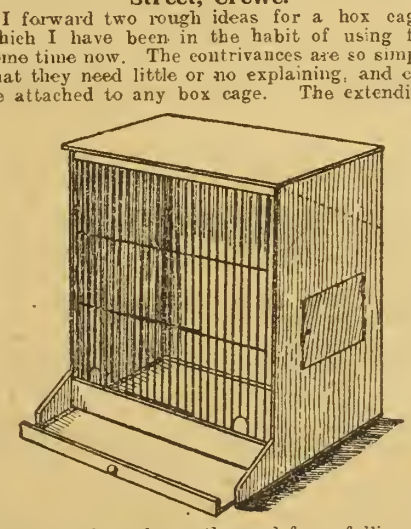
No. 416.
A Sand-tray Knob.
Sent by H. Price, 3, Gaut's Gate, Middle Cotcha, Blaenavon, Mon.



The enclosed is a simple way to make a neat knob for cage drawers, etc. Get a dolly peg (commonly used everywhere to peg clothes on lines). Cut off knob at B. Bore a hole through A, and with a nail or screw attach it to the centre of sand tray, as at D. Then when enamelling the cage inside, put a bit of enamel on the knob, which will set it off all right. I may say that the remainder of the peg, viz., C, can be used for its usual purpose. So with the exception of one nail and a small touch of enamel, they cost nothing.

No. 417.
Two Ideas for Box Cages.
Sent by T. Lubbathan, 124, Market Street, Crewe.

I forward two rough ideas for a box cage, which I have been in the habit of using for some time now. The contrivances are so simple that they need little or no explaining, and can be attached to any box cage. The extending drawer at front keeps the seed from falling on the floor, and the sloping roof throws more light into the bottom of the cage, and also makes a receptacle to receive the nail without the latter being seen. The top being flat will allow of another cage being placed on the top if needed.

Wild Bird Life.

Notes on the Nightingale.

Once more our district has been [illegible]voured by the "King of Songsters," a[illegible] two particular spots his glorious [illegible] be heard at irregular intervals [illegible] write "irregular" because [illegible] no fixed time for commencing [illegible] ances. I have heard him sing [illegible] whole of a long May day, [illegible] whisper from the leafy copse [illegible] At times he sings mostly in the [illegible] of the night, and again just [illegible] break. At one time I was under the impression that his music was regulated [illegible] way by the state of his domestic [illegible] ments, but after several years' [illegible] watching I am still unable to [illegible] formances into any tabulated [illegible] conditions of the weather, food [illegible] each, or all, affect him, or his singing [illegible] simply the natural outburst of [illegible] spirit, regulated by nothing else. [illegible] well-known writers take quite opposite [illegible] respecting this glorious songster. [illegible] "The male members of this species [illegible] upon our shores from ten days to a [illegible] night earlier than the females, and [illegible] night, in order to attract the latter, [illegible] travel during the hours of darkness. [illegible] other authority, after writing of the [illegible] arrivals, continues: "Several males [illegible] heard singing in the same wood in answer [illegible] one another throughout the whole day. [illegible] soon, however, as the hen birds have [illegible] building operations are commenced, and [illegible] male sings more frequently towards night [illegible] fall, continuing at intervals throughout the [illegible] night, if the weather be fine." The latter [illegible] remarks can hardly be regarded as strictly [illegible] accurate, for on warm, wet, or showery nights [illegible] the Nightingale will sing incessantly; if he [illegible] did not, he would be totally distinct from all [illegible] other species, which appear to delight to fill [illegible] the air with their melody on wet summer [illegible] evenings. At no other time does the full rich [illegible] music of the Blackbird, or the mellow piping [illegible] of the Blackcap sound so rich and full-throated as when the hedgerows and trees [illegible] are laden with moisture. They have [illegible] plenty of time to spare for music and relaxation, for rain brings forth the fat worm and slug—an easily gathered feast.

How Birds Fly.

When a bird is flying the wing does not move vertically as is generally supposed, but has a certain revolving movement, being fixed to a ball-socket joint.

The Woodpigeon's Nest.

Wood Pigeons occasionally build upon the tops of other old nests, which probably makes a good foundation for its basket work nest of twigs. In choosing a site in a tree, they will generally prefer a branch somewhat flattened.

BURTON-ON-TRENT C.B.S.

Meeting, held June 7th. It was decided to have 14 classes for the young bird show, held on July 9th. Mr. Walton, of Leicester, to judge. Members competing for challenge bowl must make their nominations to the secretaries not later than June 18th. A ramble was arranged, weather permitting, for Saturday, June 18th. Those wishing to go to be at the station at 2 p.m. prompt. A present of a handsome teapot was given to Mrs. Elliott, in recognition of her services during the late successful show season.—ELLIOTT AND WOOD, Secretaries.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held May 11th; Mr. Robson, vice-president, in the chair, and a fair attendance of members. The following were admitted as members:—Mr. E. Atkinson (Low Fell), Mr. Tindle (Gateshead), and Mr. W. Smith (Gosforth). Patronage for specialist clubs was next gone into; two classes were put on for the Northern Lizard Club. Will members please note that at our next monthly meeting Mr. E. Floyd, of Ashington, is to give us a lecture. Let us try and have a good turn up of members, to give Mr. Floyd a hearty welcome amongst the Gateshead fanciers. Committee meeting, Friday, June 17th; business: to go into schedule for annual show.—A. HOLDEN, Assist. Sec.

SOUTHALL AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held Monday, May 30th, when a good number of members were present. In the absence of Mr. A. E. Argyle, Mr. S. A. Neal was elected to the chair for the evening. The auditors, Messrs. Kidd and Morgan, reported the balance-sheet to be all in order, showing a deficit of 11s. 9d. on the society's first year. The schedule for the Young Bird and Finch Show, to be held on June 27th, was settled upon; copies will be sent to members in due course. We have six cash specials and one special in kind for competition. It is to be hoped members will bring out their birds and make a good show. Mr. J. Robson is the judge, and he will speak a few words on the exhibits. Fanciers and friends are cordially invited.—T. G. JEFFERY, Hon. Sec.

SCOTCH FANCY NATIONAL DERBY O.A.

The half-yearly meeting was held in the Grand National Halls on 13th June, Mr. Wright, president, in the chair. Minutes read and approved; the report on tickets sold was submitted. The President announced that Mr. Brown, of East Kilbride, had most generously bestowed a handsome donation to the funds of the society. The members highly appreciated his kindness, and wish him every success. The judges were selected, and as soon as their acceptances have been received their names will be intimated through the columns of CAGE BIRDS. In addition to the members already published, the following gentlemen have joined:—Gatheart, W. Baillie; Barrhead, James Price and Richard Price; Falkirk, Mr. Carlaw; Greenock, Mr. Archibald, T. Beckett, J. Glover, J. A. Wright, R. Wright; Paisley, W. Hart. If those who have not already accounted for membership tickets sent them will kindly do so now, they will confer a favour upon THOMAS SMITH, Sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held June 2nd; Mr. J. Mackenzie in the chair. The following gentlemen were elected members:—Mr. Pitch (Newcastle), and Mr. Buck (Gateshead). Letters were read from Rev. W. Ellis granting us permission to visit his gardens at Bothal Haugh, and from Mr. Lackey, who offers to act as guide on the occasion of our trip on race Thursday. Train leaves Newcastle (Central) at 1.30. Will all those who are going please notify me early, so that I can get tickets for them at reduced rates (2/-); tea will cost 9d. or 1/-, at Morpeth. It was decided to adopt the committee's recommendation that we take no action in forming a Northern Federation this year. Mr. W. Curry presented his report on the social, showing a balance of £1 11s. 3d., which was put to the cup fund. Votes of thanks were given Mr. Curry and the social stewards, and a committee was appointed to buy a cup for the nest feather show, Canary section. This gives us two challenge cups for that show. It was decided that the judges take alternate classes, and decide at the show who takes class 1, and so on. The rules for the open show were then taken, and the meeting adjourned to June 16, when the open show classes will be taken. Rule cards and schedules for the nest feather show are now ready, and anyone who has been overlooked please communicate with me. We have engaged the large Co-operative Hall, and hope to have as good a show as many of the smaller open shows. Please note the date, July 9th. I made a slight error in schedule:—Cardinals should be in large foreign class, not small. —T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting at headquarters, 60, Paddington Street, W., on June 13th, with Mr. A. W. Curtis in the chair. Mrs. Thynne was elected a member. Letters were read from Mr. W. T. Page, the N.B.B. & M.C. and Mr. Sidney H. Harris (offering a special prize for Y.B.S.). A schedule consisting of 51 classes was drawn up for the Young Bird Show, taking place on July 3rd, and Messrs. G. Saytch, B. Parkhurst, and A. H. Curtis offered their services as stewards for the same. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. G. E. Weston for the gift of a silver-plated cup for competition amongst the novices in the British limit classes at the annual show. This gift was conditional on the understanding that a novice should be clearly defined. Taking advantage of the opportunity afforded by the unavoidable absence of Mr. W. Page (who should have given a Cage Making demonstration) a long discussion took place as to what should constitute a novice in the British limit classes, with the following result: A novice is one who has not won a first prize at three separate shows in members' classes, or one first in open competition. Complaint has been made in respect of the irregularity of reports of meetings sent to the Press, and coupled with this it is felt that sufficient publicity is not given to those lecturers who, from time to time, and at great inconvenience to themselves, visit us. To obviate this blemish, the services of a reporting official has been enlisted, through the generosity of Mr. W. Shepherd. Mr. Weston (as representing the Association) then gave us an account of the recent outing in conjunction with the N.B.B. & M.C. The outing, he said, was one of the most enjoyable possible to imagine. There they saw bird life, consisting of over forty species, in the smallest space he had ever known, the party having only walked two to three miles. The outing was admirably organised by the Association's old member, Mr. T. H. Trower. Special prizes for the young bird show were presented by Messrs. A. W. Curtis, W. Shepherd, T. Pickard, W. Prance, G. E. Weston, Mrs. Stevens, and F. Knight. A vote of sympathy was directed to be conveyed to Mr. T. Kelly, at the loss of the whole of his winning medals through the work of a callous burglar. Mr. T. Yeo accepted the office of staging steward, rendered vacant by the resignation of Mr. Shepherd to fill the office of scrutineer, the same giving every satisfaction. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

FALKIRK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in Oddfellows' Hall, President Robert Dickson in the chair. Six new members were accepted. It was agreed to leave the placing of specials for nest feather show over till the day of show. A table show of British birds was held, and Mr. H. Moreland placed the awards:—1st and 4th, Millar and Eadie, well-known Yellowhammer leading; 4th wants size; 2nd, 3rd, 5th, Robertson, 2nd Yellowhammer, could do with more size, and scarcely so hot in colour as winner, 3rd Linnet, good colour and lacing, 5th non-fed Siskin.—R. HAMILTON, Sec.

LARKHALL C.B.A.

Meeting held in the Miners' Hall on 4th June. It was decided to close the membership for young bird cup competition on July 2nd, and to again confine the show to members. Mr. Chalmers, Kirkintillock, will judge the Canary section, and Mr. Alston, Darvel, the British, etc. A new cup for best young bird bred by a member has been purchased, to be won three times, not necessarily in succession, before becoming exhibitor's property. The date of show is fixed for October 29th. The society has a good balance in hand, and it is hoped that fanciers in the district will rally round the club and make the 1910 show a record success. Full particulars as to membership can be had from James Pollock, Sec., 30, Marshall Street, Larkhall.

BRAMLEY AND DISTRICT O.S.

Monthly meeting, held May 30th, Mr. Richmond presiding. Resolved that the next meeting night be Friday, June 24th, for entries for first feather show. Members should note that no entries will be taken after Friday night. This rule will be strictly enforced. Also the Y.U. pattern water tins must be used, and no others. Samples of colour food are to hand, and those requiring same should give their orders at this meeting, so that it can be got at once. It was decided that the three highest birds in each variety count for the section specials, which consist of silver teapots, tea urns, copper kettles, and a dozen or so other specials, including silver medals, etc., so it is hoped fanciers will roll up with their entries. Two new members were accepted. We are holding two first feather shows, June 25th, July 16th.—WM. MALTBY, Hon. Sec., 11, Cross Bath Road, Bramley, Leeds.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Meeting held June 8th; Mr. Atkinson in the chair. New members:—Mr. Brydon and Miss K. Haggie (Gateshead). Correspondence was read from Mr. Cowgill and Mr. Cuthbertson. Decided that Mr. Cowgill's lecture be on September 19th. Decided that the secretary write the secretaries of the other Yorkshire specialist clubs, Southern, Midland, and Scottish, to get their opinion re an inter-club trophy. Decided that the secretary get a further supply of colour-food for the members from Mr. Sandiford, as last year; the profits are given to the club's funds. Also that he obtain a further supply of standard show cages for members, and those who require any should let me know early, as we must take 3 dozen to get them at reduced prices. I have 26 bespoken for now. Decided that the next table show be held on June 30th; Mr. Davison judge. A successful table show was also held; 29 birds in the two classes. Mr. Ellwood judged, and gave great satisfaction. CLEARS: 1, Brydon; 2, Dix; 3, vhc, hc, Tomlinson; 4, Hutler; c, Coomber. TICKS, ETC. 1, hc, Hutler; 2, 3, 4, Tomlinson; vhc, Wigglesworth; c, Leach. Subscriptions are due now, and should be sent to me before the end of this month. —T. C. CRAWHALL.

READING AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at Palmer Hall on June 1st before a very fair attendance. The minutes being confirmed, several little details in connection with the First Feather Show on July 13th were settled. Mr. R. J. Locke then read a short paper on "Moulting and Colour Feeding," showing us the methods he had found gave him the best results. One striking fact was that he did not believe in rape seed, and did not use it at all. As he has the reputation of being a practical fancier, his paper was listened to with close attention, and several of our prominent breeders taking part, led to a good discussion. The novice members ought to turn the knowledge gained to good account this season. One interesting fact was brought out, viz., that every member taking part in it was using Spratts' Cod-liver Oil Food, but they all used a small quantity of egg with it. At the finish a very hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Locke. He briefly replied, saying that although he had only just come to Reading to live, he was glad to be amongst us, and he was glad he had joined. A very pleasant evening then came to a close. Our next meeting will be on July 13th, and not the first Wednesday as usual.—W. H. PYKE, Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held June 2nd, Mr. A. Bradshaw (president) in the chair. Secretary read a letter from Mr. Lythgoe, asking if we would elect a delegate to attend a suggested meeting to discuss the agenda of the late annual meeting of the C.B.U., also if we would send on to him any suggestions that would benefit the C.B.U. It was decided that our delegate go to the proposed meeting, and we suggest that it be held at Derby. Decided that the following recommendations be sent to Mr. Lythgoe:—(1) That in future a delegate have a card vote to represent all the members of his society; (2) that the duties of the various delegates to the shows be altered; (3) that rule 22 be deleted; (4) that the annual meeting of the C.B.U. be held at shows other than the Palace. The following is the result of the table show, open to novices, for young birds:—YORKS., YELL.: 1, 4, Tomlinson; 2, Lockwood; 3, Crapper; vhc, Lawton; hc, Smith; c, A. Hobson. BUFF: 1, Tomlinson; 2, Scott; 3, Smith; 4, hc, Webster; vhc, Lockwood; c, Crapper. NOR. BUFF: 1, Dobson; 2, 3, Scott. Next meeting a lecture and table show of British birds, and, in addition, Mr. A. Hobson will open a discussion on the rules of the society. The nest feather show will be held on June 25th in the Friends' School, Prospect Road, Heeley. The secretaries will sit on Monday, June 20th, from 8 till 9 o'clock p.m., at Wentworth Cafe, to receive all entries. Mr. P. Walsh has kindly promised two prizes, one for most and the other for second most entries in British bird classes, donor not to compete. Mr. C. Bacon was elected a member.—J. WOOLHOUSE.

Crewe and District C.B.S.

The members of Crewe and Dis. O.S. were favoured with beautiful weather on Saturday, June 11th, when about fifteen of their members met at Crewe railway station to make the journey to Audlem, which is surrounded by glorious Cheshire scenery. Upon arriving at our destination we were met by Mr. W. Bowker, the society's British bird enthusiast, who had proceeded earlier in the day to make arrangements for the party, and also to obtain permission to view the gardens and grounds of Shavington Hall, the seat of Captain Heyward-Longsdale. The party at once repaired to the fields, and passed along the banks of the river Weaver, which abounds with bird life. They soon came across the nest of the Reed Bunting containing eggs, and here a number of members indulged in the chase and capture of a number of dragon flies of all hues and shades (one of the party being a naturalist). The nest of the Greenfinch was found containing one egg; and in rapid succession the nests of the Chaffinch, Blackbird, and Hedge Sparrow. Hereabouts a section of the party faced the camera. On again, the party found the nests of the Wren and the Greater Whitethroat containing six young ones. The party now had an exciting experience, coming in contact with a bull (not a Finch) who chanced to "look," and then there was a general stampede, headed by the veteran treasurer, who easily "did even time." The grounds of the Hall and the hot houses were inspected and in the gardens the nests of Goldfinches were found in the apple trees. In the grounds a large number of nest-boxes had been placed upon the trees, and on our guide taking one down it was seen to contain the nest of the Great Tit with four young ones. At the home of Mr. Bowker a first-class spread had been provided, after partaking of which the party extended their best thanks to the host and hostess for their thoughtfulness and kindness, also for music provided. The party then started on their homeward journey, and the first nest to claim our attention was that of the Magpie, which we had some difficulty in reaching; then came the nest of the Moorhen with three eggs; the Lark, and Chaffinch, and then on to the station to book for home.—J. C. HEATON, assistant hon. secretary.

A NOTICE TO READERS.

Readers intending to compete for the £5 cash prize we are offering for the best essay on the subject: "Is it Cruel to Keep Birds in Cages," should remember that all attempts must reach us by Wednesday next, June 22, on which date the competition closes.

We have been favoured with the services of Mr. J. Wilson (Sandy Lane) as judge for our First Feather show to be held this Saturday, June 18th, writes Mr. J. Lewis, hon. secretary, Spen Valley C.B.S.

My new price list is now in the printers' hands, writes Mr. W. Pimm, the well-known Birmingham dealer, and will be sent to all applicants in a few days' time. The demand for my list is very heavy.

We have engaged Mr. C. A. House to judge our annual show, writes Mr. A. T. Riddles, hon. secretary, Brighton C.B.A. (29, Inwood Crescent). Any fanciers wishing to join us can do so as membership is open.

On receiving my Cage Birds last week I got a pleasant surprise to see the illustration of my champion yellow Border hen. I congratulate your artist, Mr. H. Goodchild, on his work, and I wish Cage Birds every success.—James Hamilton (Eskbank).

At the monthly meeting of the Longton and Dist. C.B.S., it was decided to postpone the first feather show from June 18 until July 2, write Messrs. Nallam and Lovatt, the hon. secs. We also elected three more members, viz., Messrs. Ritchford, Child, and Mullock.

The Tong and Dis. C.B.S. has arranged a fine list of members' shows for the 1910-11 season, three First Feather and five Second Feather fixtures, and some grand prizes are to be won thereat. The secretary is Mr. J. Smith, 7, Rose Terrace, Tong Street, Bradford, who will be glad to hear from fanciers desiring to join.

The Metropolitan C.B.A. has arranged two young bird shows, for June 23rd and July 21st, at "The Crown Hotel," Lavender Hill, when 3 cups and a silver-plated tea-pot are to be competed for. The secretary, Mr. G. Harwood (9, Frere Street, Battersea Park Road, S.W.), will be glad to enrol fanciers as members of the society.

Fanciers sending parcels, etc., to any parts of the world will find the "A.B.C. Tariff of Rates," issued by Messrs. Neale and Wilkinson (colonial and foreign shippers, 32, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.), very useful, as the various tables therein give the carriage rates and rules of shipment to practically every quarter of the globe.

Will members of the Musselburgh O.S. take notice, writes Mr. W. Nisbet, the secretary, that the date of the First Feather show has been altered from July 9th to July 23rd, owing to the hall being otherwise engaged; also that the classes read: Yorks. two, Nor. four, Borders four, and Mules one, in place of those that appeared in last week's issue of Cage Birds. The schedules will be out shortly.

I am pleased to see your Summer Holiday Competition, writes Mr. John H. Jowett (Bradford), and I shall be more pleased still to read in the future of the successful competitors. Readers ought to be thankful of so good an opportunity, and make good use of such a competition. The £10 alone should be a grand "week off" for Mr. and Mrs. Someone, away to the bracing air at the seaside.

The Barnsley C.B.S. has made arrangements to have a country ramble on Sunday, June 19th, writes Mr. H. Sims, the secretary. Anyone who would like to take a part in this will, I venture to say, find it a very interesting one. Meet at Stainboro' Inn, at 10 a.m. We shall then proceed through Stainboro' Park on a splendid route for bird life. Anyone interested heartily invited. Members please turn up to time, and make this venture a success.

Glorious success. Record sales. Ramsden's pure peppers for 1910. Finest on the market. Mr. Spillman, of Devonport, in ordering, says: "I have pleasure in predicting a record sale for you in Plymouth." Mr. Colton, of Sheffield, writes: "Your peppers are better than ever this year." Messrs. Hopkins, of Bolton, write: "We may say that we used your feed last season, and were successful in winning the tea urn presented by Mr. J. E. Davies to the Norwich Plainhead Club, the tea service for best Norwich at Gateshead, the Whitehead Challenge Cup of the Bolton Ornithological Society, besides firsts at every N.P.C. Club show. This testifies to the quality of your feeds, as colour is one of the principal points with Norwich Plainheads." Quality tells. Buy Ramsden's peppers and know you have the best the world produces.—(Advt.)

I note you are inserting our Nest Feather show in two places, writes Mr. W. Woollett, secretary, Barrington and Choppington Social Club C.B.S., but June 25th is our show date, and I wish you would mention it, as I am afraid that it might lead some of our members in the outlying districts astray. We have got our society on to a very sound footing, and we are looking forward to having good times at our shows. Most of our members are now doing well, breeding, and we are doing everything in our power to make our society a huge success. We have special classes, as our headquarters are at a social club, and some of the members desired to be members of the bird club, so that we put classes on for them, and we hope to get them to breed their own some day. We have been promised a good lot of specials including a gold medal.

The following are the judges, writes Mr. George Brown, the secretary, for the Leith O.S. annual show, to be held in Junction Road Church Hall, on October 22nd: Scotch Fancy, John Pringle (Selkirk) and C. Caldwell (Ballieston); Norwich, John Adams (Dundee); Borders, Joseph Thomson (Newtongrange); Brit. and Mules, Peter Pettigrew (Glasgow).

I received the painting (won in your Essay Competition) safely, for which I return my very best thanks, writes Mr. E. Collins (Barnstaple). It is a very beautiful and exquisite piece of work, and I must congratulate Mr. Norman on the faultless manner in which he has shown the blending of the parents in the different Hybrids. How happy I should be to be the possessor of such an ideal team in real life, for then I should soon reach the goal of my ambition—to put down a winning team of Hybrids at the "Great Glass House." My Hybrids have secured nearly forty prizes at the leading Western shows, but it is my hope and ambition to win at the Crystal Palace with a bird bred by the exhibitor—a hope which was almost realised at the last Palace Show, when my Goldfinch-Redpoll Hybrid secured the v.h.c. card in a strong class of eighteen birds. I again thank you for the beautiful painting, and wish Cage Birds the success it so richly deserves.

Challenge Cup for Perth.

At the last monthly meeting of the Perth City and County Ornithological Association it was intimated, we hear, that Sir John A. Dewar, Bart., M.P., had agreed to present a challenge cup for annual competition. The cup will be competed for among the members only, and will be awarded each year for the best young bird bred by a member in that season.

Inquest on a Canary.

An inquest on a canary is shortly to be held at Charing Cross Hospital, says the "Daily Mirror." It is in connection with the mysterious case of poisoning which occurred on Friday last in Neal Street, Long Acre, where eight persons narrowly escaped with their lives. Mme. Guillet, one of the residents, was roused to a sense of danger by the fall of her Canary from its perch, apparently overcome by fumes, and a careful examination of the bird may, it is thought, lead to a solution of the mystery. A report of the result will be forwarded to Sir Shirley Murphy, the medical officer of the London County Council.

Lancashire Gossip.

Mr. John Rukin, hon. sec. Lancashire and Lizard F.A., writes: Our late tea and social has already borne fruit, as at our society's last meeting one of the members told us that since the social, his wife has turned over a new leaf, and is now always giving a helping hand. Mr. White gave us a racy tale or two regarding the bird-men of long ago, one in particular about a report that all the entries in the first feather classes had escaped through the water holes, being especially laughable. We also had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a gentleman who solemnly informed us that he had learned everything regarding Canaries years ago, so that Hyde at any rate holds a champion bird expert. We might possibly solve the matter of judging Lancashires, which is so much on the carpet just now, and by doing so provide satisfaction for all, for a man who "knows all about Canaries" cannot fail, surely, to give satisfaction.

Is It Coming to This?

The court was packed. Women with set, white faces glared down at the unfortunate prisoner. Men stood appalled at the enormity of the crime.

The inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Plants was speaking.

"I saw accused, your worship," he said, "deliberately, and in the most brutal manner imaginable, hack a splendid head of cauliflower from its parent stalk."

Men groaned in anguish.

"What was the instrument of the crime?" queried the J.P.

"A rusty table -knife, your honour," responded the S.P.C.P. inspector.

Women shrieked and fainted.

"This is a crime of unparalleled brutality!" gasped the J.P. "Nothing more cowardly or callous could possibly be perpetrated on a dumb, innocent plant! The prisoner must be committed for trial."—Answers.

FIRST FEATHER SHOWS.

Important Notice to Show Officials,

With the object of stimulating interest in First Feather (young bird) Shows, and of increasing the attendance thereat, and consequently helping onwards the Societies holding these fixtures, we have decided to accept advertisements of these shows at the reduced charge of 3s. 6d. per single column inch (2s. the half inch). And we will present a special prize of a framed plate to all societies spending not less than 10s. 6d. in advertising their Young Bird Show in our columns. Secretaries taking advantage of this offer should state very clearly in their advertisements the date, time, and place of the show. These particulars put before our readers will, without doubt, result in a much greater attendance at these early fixtures, and the making of new members, while the "gate-money" (where a charge is made) will benefit, and the sale of catalogues, too. This special cheap rate, of course, only applies to First Feather shows.

Fifty Years in the Fancy.

An interview with Mr. William Shakespeare, of Kentish Town (a descendant of "the Bard of Avon") who relates interesting reminiscences concerning the "good old days" of the hobby, and the men who then played leading parts in the Fancy.

Sometime since, as I sat discussing ordinary Fancy topics with Mr. W. Shakespeare, formerly of Birmingham, but now of London, and who, by the way, is a descendant of the great poet of Avon, after whom he is named, it occurred to me that it might interest the readers of CAGE BIRDS if some of Mr. Shakespeare's reminiscences were published. To think was to act. I asked him to grant me the privilege of an interview. It was granted, and recently I learnt from Mr. Shakespeare a few of the events which have been retained in his memory after fifty years of the Fancy.—C. A. HOUSE.

"Fifty years. That's a long time!"

"Yes, it's a long way to look back, and yet I remember as though it was only yesterday how I commenced in the Fancy."

"I can quite believe it. Early impressions fasten themselves on one's memory, and though they may be followed by others which are far more important, far more epoch-making, and fraught with results of far greater moment, yet those early impressions retain their hold. Can you tell me about your first Canaries?"

The First Pair.

"My first pair. Ah! only too well do I remember them. They cost me 6s., cage and all complete. They were two heavily-marked birds. The cage was an old clothes' box, with a front composed of the bottom of an old wire riddle. Not a very artistic affair, you will say, but young fanciers are easily satisfied, and my converted box pleased me more than a most elaborately finished breeding cage would to-day."

"You are right. The enthusiasm of youth can put up with much that is inconvenient. But how did the birds go on?"

"How did they go on? How did they not go on! They went to nest and laid nine eggs."

"A good start that."

"I thought so. It was a surprise, I can tell you. Then they sat. I inquired from a friend how long Canaries sat, and was told seventeen days. Seventeen days passed, and no young appeared, so I inquired of 'a local know-all.' He said 'Three weeks.' At the end of twenty-one days I was still without youngsters. I got in company with an expert, or one who had the reputation of being such. He said, 'A month, the same as ducks.' I waited in fond expectation, but the young birds came not, and I was doomed to disappointment. The hens deserted the nest."

"The hens?"

"Yes, I had got two hens. I took them back to the man I bought them from. He had a jolly good laugh, but he gave me my money back. I set to work and made a cage after the style of the other one, and purchased another pair from a dealer in Birmingham for 7s."

"Did you make sure of a pair?"

"You may depend I did. I heard the cock sing before I left the place. These did well. I reared fifteen young ones the first year. I began to wonder what to do with them. I had no cages, and the expense of keeping them appeared to me enormous, and left me no money for luxuries. I therefore decided to sell out, and purchase a better pair with the proceeds. The dealer offered me a price, something about the value of White Mice, but I let him have them."

"What did you do with your bird money. Did you start again?".

Then—And Now.

"No, I waited a little while. I thought I would try and pick up a bit of knowledge and experience before I made another start. It was hard to do so. We had no books or papers in those days. We used now and then to get a little news in "The Journal of Horticulture," and it was from that I got my first information. It was not much we got, but those little items were treasured, I can tell you. The 'Exchange and Mart' also used to give a few notes now and then, and occasionally the report of a show. Then as Canary-keeping became more popular, the shows became more numerous, and other papers came along, the 'Fanciers' Gazette,' 'Live Stock Journal,' 'Stock-Keeper,' 'Poultry,' 'Fur and Feather,' and last, but not least, and champion of all, CAGE BIRDS, the first paper to be devoted entirely to the interests of bird lovers. You know what it used to be like in the old days."

"Yes, I do know what the Fancy used to be like in the old days, and those of us who remember those days must feel thankful they no longer exist."

"You are right. If we wanted to know anything we used to have to find it out ourselves, and pay for it by bitter experience. We had no 'Answers to Correspondents,' free of charge. No cheap hand-books. Fanciers of to-day indeed ought to be thankful that they can get such a budget as CAGE BIRDS gives them every week for a penny, and thank their lucky stars they do not live in 'the good old days.'"

"Now about your second start?"

"Well, I waited a bit, I searched round and made the acquaintance of a few fanciers, and attended some of the local shows which were all held in connection with some public-house or the other. The club I joined was held at the Broad Street Tavern, Birmingham, which was kept by J. Royal, the brother of the noted pugilist of that name."

"What breed did you take up?"

"I commenced with Norwich, and having bred a few really classical birds, I was induced to join the club I have mentioned. When the time for the show came round, I was induced to make a few entries, and did fairly well."

"Can you remember any particular incident about this show?"

"The one great incident of the show was that the principal exhibitor was Mr. W. Smith. He made a large entry and captured all the prizes. His success caused so much doubt and dissatisfaction that it led to the breaking up of the club."

"Can you tell me anything about your first open show?"

"Yes, it was held at the Oddfellows' Hall, Temple Street, Birmingham. There I first saw any good birds, and also there I first set eyes on a Crested Norwich. The Show was an annual in those days."

The Old Time Crest.

"Those Crests were very different to what we see now. Eh?"

"Rather! The birds were very small in body, with neat little daisy crests, but they were very nicely marked, and were of beautiful colour and quality. They were shown by a local fancier, Mr. J. Turner, but hailed, I believe, from Nottingham."

"Can you remember any other of these early shows?"

"One which made a great impression upon me was held at the Globe Tavern, Great Hampton Street, which was kept by Sam Brown, who was well known as a keen Belgian fancier. This show was much talked of before hand, and was advertised as 'a grand show,' even though it was only a public-house show, and a grand show it was. It was here that I first saw a really high-class collection of the cream of the Fancy—Belgians, Lancashires, Lizards, Norwich, Cinnamons, etc."

"Do you remember who were the exhibitors?"

"Amongst others were Messrs. J. Corbett, J. Turner, A. Hamer, J. Brown-Weeks, the four Derby B's—J. Bexson, G. J. Barnesby, Sam Bunting, and E. Bemrose, of whom only Mr. Bexson is left to us. There were others whose names I cannot recall now, but who are to-day known to the exhibiting fanciers."

"This is the saddening part of looking back. It recalls old scenes which are to memory dear, but it also brings to one's recollection dear old friends who have passed into the great beyond."

"It is so, and it does indeed make one feel the advance of years."

"Such a show as this no doubt served to increase your own enthusiasm, I presume?"

"It did, indeed. Those birds are in my mind's eye now. I shall never forget. Never had I seen such beauties. They stirred me up to greater efforts. I got quite mixed up in the Fancy, and caught the bird fever properly. So much so that I thought it about time to get paired up myself. I was not long in finding a suitable mate. When we started housekeeping I had a room to myself for the birds, and at one time and another kept most of the breeds."

"Which breeds were most largely kept in Birmingham in those days?"

"All breeds had their followers, but Belgians were the principal favourites, I should think. About this time a show was announced to come off at the Exchange Rooms, New Street. I entered four of my birds and got two 3rds, and two vhc's, which was not bad against such men as Adams, Athersuch, Bexson, Silk, and other cracks. We had no novice or amateur classes in those days, and the young fancier had to take his chance on the open sea, sink or swim."

"Whilst you were in Birmingham, you ran several shows on your own responsibility, didn't you?"

"Yes, I promoted several local shows, and I did fairly well. I must say, however, I had a good backer behind me."

"Did you not on one occasion promote an all-England show?"

"Yes, that keen fancier, Mr. J. Bastock, and myself once went into partnership and ran an open show, and we secured a really good entry of some of the best birds of the day. Messrs. Mackley Bros., who were then at the height of their exhibiting form, made twenty entries, and other leading fanciers supported us well."

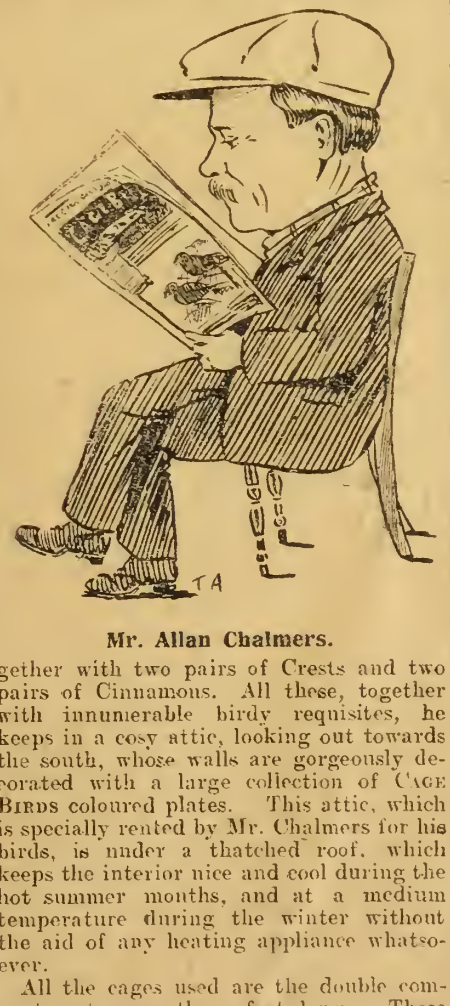
ON THE TOP RUNG:



And How I Got There.

(That well-known Scottish artist and fancier, Mr. Thos. Aitken, has undertaken a commission for CAGE BIRDS to visit within the next few weeks several of the prominent fanciers North of the Border, and put on record for the benefit of our readers brief details of the methods by which they have attained success in the hobby. Previous subjects have been Mr. A. M'Farlane (Norwich Plainheads), Mr. G. G. Henderson (British birds), and Mr. W. M'Clure (Scots Fancy).—Editor.)

Mr. Allan Chalmers
(Kirkintilloch).

Mr. Allan Chalmers formerly specialised in the breeding of Crests and Crestbreds. Only in recent years has he taken up the breeding of Norwich Plainheads, in which variety he has made a name for himself.

He had at the time of my visit nine pairs of Norwich, with several young, together with two pairs of Crests and two pairs of Cinnamons. All these, together with innumerable birdy requisites, he keeps in a cosy attic, looking out towards the south, whose walls are gorgeously decorated with a large collection of CAGE BIRDS coloured plates. This attic, which is specially rented by Mr. Chalmers for his birds, is under a thatched roof, which keeps the interior nice and cool during the hot summer months, and at a medium temperature during the winter without the aid of any heating appliance whatsoever.

All the cages used are the double compartment ones, three feet long. These are painted white inside, and have seed and water vessels fitted outside.

What are your methods of feeding your birds, Mr. Chalmers?—I generally feed on a mixture of canary, hemp, and rape seeds. In spring, just before the hens are coming on to lay, I give them inga, as I believe it is a preventative of egg binding. During incubation I feed the hens on nothing but plain canary seed, and just one day before the eggs are due to hatch I give egg food composed of sponge biscuit and egg, three biscuits to the egg.

In pairing up I usually mate yellows to buffs. I put as typical and cobby a hen as I have with as large a cock as I can get—no matter what type he be, so long as he is large and in condition. In the offspring I rely on the hen for type and the cock for size.

I have put up two yellows together, also two buffs, but merely, I might say, as an experiment. The yellows produce good stock birds, but I have never had a show bird from them. I have had very good ones from two buffs.

Now how about your methods of treating your young birds?—I separate the cock from the hen until the young are about eight or ten days old. During the first four days of their childhood the young are given only the yolk of the egg mixed with an equal amount of biscuit; after this age they get the white also. Directly they are on seed I put them into cages by themselves, occasionally running them into show cages.

Do you prefer any special form of show cage?—Oh, no! just any ordinary show cage does me; when I want to see the points of a bird I look at the bird, not the show-cage.

When do you start colour feeding?—I start at the end of July, no matter what age the young are. At this time, also, the old birds are about to start into the moult. I never use hot pepper, only cold, giving it with egg foods, every day, regularly.

I breed most of my own winners, but introduce fresh blood every year.

Have you anything to say to the novice?—A novice should never take up breeding Norwich with the idea that he will at once breed exhibition birds, and so beat Mr. So-and-So, or Mr. So-and-So. If he does he will make a sad mistake. Only if he has a very great interest in the variety will he develop the faculty of seeing the good and bad points of the birds, and only as this gradually develops will he gradually succeed.

Important Judgment Affecting Show Societies.

This case (report taken from the "Auckland Chronicle") arose out of the exhibiting of pigeons, but the point involved is one of general interest to show officials and exhibitors..

Judge O'Connor, K.C., gave an important judgment at the Auckland County Court on June 7, affecting the payment by show societies of money prizes to successful exhibitors. Mr. John Greenwood, fruiterer and newsagent, Bishop Auckland, was cited as defendant in an action brought by Mr. F. A. Metcalfe, photographer, Barnard Castle, for the payment of £1 1s., balance due on the full amount of prize money won by him as an exhibitor of pigeons at last year's show held under the auspices of the Bishop Auckland Horticultural and Live Stock Society. Mr. Greenwood was financial secretary to the society, and was sued in that capacity.

The action was brought, said Mr. Dowling, who appeared in support of it, at the instigation of the National Homing Union. The pigeons exhibited by the plaintiff won certain prizes to the total of £1 8s. at the show held on July 31, 1909. He received 7s. together with a letter stating that the show had not been a success, and that the society were only paying a quarter of the prize money. He wrote back accepting the money under protest, and informing the society that if he was paid in full he would certainly, under the circumstances, return them something. He did not, however, approve of the way in which they had acted.

Mr. Wood (for the defence) asked the plaintiff: Don't you know that similar payments were made in over three hundred cases?—Witness: That does not concern me.

Asked by the judge what the defence was, Mr. Wood said there was really no defence, except the plaintiff's conduct in taking the 7s in satisfaction of the claim.

Judge O'Connor: The society invited people to exhibit and held out certain inducements. Why haven't you paid him?

Mr. Wood: Simply because we had no funds.

Judge O'Connor: But you warranted them. This inducement was held out to people to come and exhibit and expend money and strenuous labour to send their stock in order to help you to get the money from the public. The prizes were a consideration which helped them to come and do that which you invited them to do. Otherwise it might be regarded as obtaining money by false pretences. The plaintiff seems to be entitled to judgment, and no objection has been taken to Mr. Greenwood being made the defendant.

Mr. Wood stated that the committee had already paid £2 each into a guarantee fund to be able to pay the quarter of the prize money to each winner.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

The Commonsense Treatment of British Birds.

By R. W. VANDERBEN (South Shields).

This article is the one awarded first prize by the judges in the British Bird Section of our recent Essay Competition.—EDITOR.

Though not a young one, I am, and always have been in regard to bird-keeping, an amateur, and it is to amateurs in particular that I would address myself. By amateurs I wish it to be clearly understood that I do not necessarily mean beginners, though the word is too often used in that sense. Nuttall's Dictionary defines an amateur as "one who does a thing for the love of it, and not for pecuniary reward." Nevertheless, bird-keeping as a business can only be profitably conducted by those who are sufficiently "amateurs" at heart to base their proceedings primarily on "the love" element, for unless birds are kept under the best available conditions, their profit must be curtailed; and such conditions can be ascertained most effectively by the bird lover.

My remarks, therefore, do not apply to mere dealers; they are not of much use to professionals or even to true amateurs of experience, but are a plea to those who keep birds, as they say, "just as pets." Now, if one keeps a pet, surely there cannot be much pleasure unless the pet is happy. One sees so many so-called pets in so many differing degrees of misery, most of which could be avoided by a little thought and trouble, that one is led to speculate as to what object their owners can have in spending any time or money on them, for a result so far removed from the accepted idea of a pet.

I take it that one of the most popular of pets is one or another of our common British birds; and deservedly so. They are cheap, hardy, beautiful, interesting; are not troublesome, and are long lived if caged, tended, and fed on the lines of common sense prompted by love.

Let the Home be Spacious.

Taking these essentials seriatim, it seems only rational, before getting a bird, to procure a suitable cage for it. Now, with a moment's thought, it is obvious that the best space we can give is so inadequate in comparison to natural conditions that the cage should be as large as possible. Also, though it may seem a trite remark, a bird has wings. Yet, in spite of these obvious facts, how often do we see birds in cages of absurdly small dimensions, and even then the small space available so crowded with perches as to suggest that the cages are designed to accommodate not a winged creature but one that needs a step ladder.

I would not myself keep the smallest British bird in a cage less than 18ins. by 9ins. and 13ins. high. A larger one is better, and if really a good cage for one bird it will equally well accommodate several. In fact, I have found it preferable to do this, for in spite of their reputation for peace, most birds are fond of an occasional "scrap," which is not generally of a harmful nature, but one of their joys of life, and which induces them to take more healthful exercise, if only in hustling each other about. Consequently they feed better and are, I think, more interesting than single birds. Most small Britishers commonly kept caged are more or less gregarious, and travel two or three together, or in large flocks, so there is good natural reason for getting better results by caging with companions. Only mind how you mix the species.

I advise sufficient perches for comfortable roosting accommodation only, placed as far apart as possible, so that the birds may at least need to open their wings to get from one to another. These should be of such a size that the claws and not the toes are used to grip them. The nails are thereby kept in good order, and the feet are not cramped. I prefer square perches with corners rounded off, made of clean grained deal. I like to see a cage with plenty of head room over the perches, as I find that when in health the birds will fly back and forth in this clear space from sheer joy of exercise.

It would be useless waste of space to try to describe cages for various birds. All the small British Finches will do well in a cage of dimensions not smaller than I have given. Cages for the Thrush tribe and Starlings are well known, but in choosing, let them be big. A query sent to CAGE BIRDS will elicit information as to any special class of bird you may wish to cage. Never use a cage without a sand tray. Have some arrangement for an outside bath. Let the cage be as plain as possible, with as few lurking places for parasites as possible, and in every way as accessible for cleaning as is practicable. It may be painted as prettily as you wish, but it must be washable.

Where shall the Home be?

An important consideration is where to hang. Wild birds are used to low temperatures, but not to violent changes, or to draughts, and they breathe the free air. When kept as pets they are naturally mostly kept in a living room which is heated, and the risks of draughts are thereby increased. Even at the sacrifice of some light, keep your bird on a wall as far from the fire as possible, and clear of draught either from door or window. In summer there will be light enough, and in winter the day is so lengthened by artificial light as to be quite long enough.

When possible hang the cage below the level of your head; this keeps the bird out of vitiated and heated air, and is very important for taming. Let your pet get used to people about him. When you are quiet let him be beside you on the table as you work or read. In the summer you can take him from room to room with you if you like. He will soon get so steady that he will be pleased to be in company. When he is quite steady you can let him stretch his wings by an hour's liberty in the room. He will soon learn to come from his cage for a bath on the table. This is the best way for a bath; he can get a good splash (lay an old cloth on the table) and does not soak the cage, and he gets a good dry by flying afterwards.

I use inside feeders; they are better to induce a wild bird to feed and do not spoil the neck feathers. I like, too, to get the birds used to my hand in the cage, and they do so more quickly if its entry is a signal for fresh food. I use the hand and perhaps a small piece of rag for a cage brush. It is efficient, and though I never handle a bird unnecessarily (even the tamest resents it), should the need arise for handling, they by these means take to it better. Until the bird is used to you, go about it deliberately. If when he sees your hand he should dash about, do not jerk your hand away, but stay still and he will settle; then go quietly on with what you wish to do in the cage. Soon he will be so reconciled that you may move as quickly as you wish, and he will, if you present his favourite foods, even come to your hand to receive them.

Three Important Things.

In connection with feeding there are three things of as supreme importance as the food itself. These are: gravel, lime, and salt. All have seen poultry cleaned, and a glance at their gizzards will tell you how a bird makes up for lack of teeth. One might almost think they lived on stones. You may use sand or sawdust to keep your trays clean, if you will. Personally, I use water twice a week, and on replacing the trays after drying I sprinkle them with about a tablespoon of clean stony gravel. I don't think birds mind what they walk on; the wild ones seem quite impartial: whether mud—puddles, twigs, grass, or earth, so only it be towards food, or away from an intruder, they will walk over it. But keep your trays clean, and give small stones somehow, even in a separate tin if you like.

It is open to everyone to know that the excreta of birds consists largely of lime, and as it is voided unchanged, it can only have been used as an aid to digestion. Many of the Thrush tribe when in captivity develop a fatal habit of swallowing their excreta, due, I feel sure, to their endeavour, in the absence of a fresh supply, to utilise the lime again.

Cuttlefish bone is the best form of lime to use. Fix it firmly; pass a wire through it (a hairpin will do) close to the hard shell, and interweave the outstanding ends of this in the cage bars. These big birds will consume astonishing quantities, either of cuttlefish or chalk. Try them with some broken in small pieces and see; but by fixing a large piece they get a bit of exercise as well in consuming it, and the beak is kept in better order. For the small birds there is enough lime in the prepared shell gravels; but for the sake of their beaks and for the exercise afforded, I also use cuttle.

All animals need salt in some form, particularly those which subsist wholly or in part on a vegetable diet. Personal observation first led me to realise the birds' need of it. I had noticed a wall which was patronised by large numbers of Linnets and other small birds. Similar walls were near, but the birds did not go to them. I found that the wall so exclusively patronised was that of a shed where salt had been stored for a long time, and the structure was so impregnated with the salt that it glistened in the sun. Between the stones it had been furrowed by the birds, which had utilised it as their source of supply.

One may see them also at the salt which is put in the fields for cattle, and all sorts of birds whose feeding grounds are distant from such locality resort to the seashore, probably for salt, perhaps also for lime. My own tame birds when flying in the room will attack the salt cellar on the table. With my shell gravel I mix salt, about a teaspoonful to a pint of gravel. The birds will make the best of their food if these essentials to digestion be given.

Southampton O.S.

On June 1st the Southampton Ornithological Society held their second annual outing. About thirty members and friends left headquarters at Shirley Road in a four-horse brake, and drove to Rufus Stone, in the Forest. The weather was all that could be desired. They partook of a meat tea on arriving, and then had a ramble in the Forest. Nothing was wanting, for the hon. secretary, Mr. Parmiter, and members of the committee did all that was possible to make the day enjoyable, and downright well did they do it. We started to return about 7.30, all having enjoyed a jolly good outing.—W. H.

Torbay O.S.

The annual ramble of the Torbay Ornithological Society took place on June 1st. The party started from Paignton at 2 p.m., going as far as Torre by train, when the journey by foot to Coombe Cellars was facing them. By the kind permission of C. E. Browne, Esq., a walk through the magnificently wooded grounds of Barton Hall was much enjoyed. At about 5.30 the destination was reached, when tea, very ably provided by Mr. Stigings, was partaken of, after which photographs of the party were taken by Mr. F. S. Collings. Some of the senior members of the party here realised the fact that they can be beaten at walking (if not on the show bench) by the juniors, so they returned by the shortest route, via Newton Abbot, the juniors returning through St. Mary Church to Torre, thus making it a circular trip. Home was reached about 9.30, after a very enjoyable outing. Amongst those who took part were Messrs. A. N. Innes, P. W. Mugford, J. N. Jeffery, Jack Jeffery, J. H. Elliot, W. Hodge, C. Parnell, W. Parnell, F. S. Collings, A. Mudge, H. Binmore, W. Rossiter, W. Webber, and E. Fogwell.—C. PARNELL, secretary.

Denton and District C.B.S.

The first ramble of the season was held on Saturday, June 11th, when a nice company assembled at the meeting place, Crown Point. We went by car to Victoria Station, Manchester. Here we were met by our leader, Mr. W. Midgley. The day was glorious. From Manchester we took train to Eastwood, and had a look round the village, then walked up the stepping stones to the top of the moors. While going up one of our party had a "slip in the river" while nesting, but was quickly rescued by the other members. He escaped with "just a little bath," which no doubt would have been more refreshing had he had a change. The diversity of nesting places was frequently remarked on. We then crossed the moors to Hardcastle Craggs, where a good tea awaited us. Leaving Hardcastle Craggs we took the road to Hebden Bridge. One of our party (Mr. J. Harrison) kept the company alive by his old-time skits. On our way to Hebden Bridge we had a look for wild seeds, which one of our party explained to us. The call of the cuckoo was often heard. Arriving in Hebden Bridge we caught the 9.11 train back to Manchester; one of our members had to come home without his hat, having lost it on the way. We left our leader, Mr. W. Midgley, in Manchester after thanking him very much for his services in choosing such a grand ramble. We arrived home about 11.30, having spent a most pleasant and instructive day amongst the birds we love to see, hear, keep, and study.

Wild Bird Life.

Young Fledglings.

The bird population has increased immensely during the last few weeks. As one rambles through fields, and over the breezy downs, young birds of the year may be noted on every side. It is astonishing how helpless some of these young things appear to be. Fortunately for them, whenever danger approaches their first instinct appears to be to get to cover, and how firmly this desire is bred in them, is easily demonstrated by one's trying to get them into the open. They seem to know that out in the fields they are at the mercy of any enemy that sees them, immature wings and want of power prevents their flying any distances.

The other day we attempted to get a young Song Thrush into the open, as I wished to examine him. With a little trouble we managed to get him to leave the hedgerow and felt sure of catching him, but a barbed wire fence, intervening at the opportune moment gave him time to gain sufficient strength to get back to cover. He very quickly saw where the danger lay, and try as we would we could never again succeed in getting him to leave the security of the hedgerow.

I believe the easiest young birds to catch are Starlings, especially where they have been reared in the old trees. As soon as they are able to leave the nest they flutter to the ground, and may be seen at almost any time in the long grass. We have had several in the garden this year, out of the elm trees in the park. I caged one recently to see how the old ones would behave. At first they were rather suspicious and walked round and round the "prison" with a beak full of grubs, and then flew off without feeding the little one. Each parent in turn visited the spot and at last answered his pleading call for food, but the difficulty of feeding him at the side was great, for the bars were close together. After one or two attempts, one of the old ones got over the difficulty by dropping the food through the bars at the top of the cage, into his open beak. For experiments sake, I repeatedly moved the cage, and I believe they would have followed it all over the village! This action of the old birds, however, is not very surprising when one considers how they sometimes have to hunt round for the youngsters which have moved during their absence for food.

Is the Landrail Disappearing?

A daily paper affirms that the Landrail is fast disappearing in consequence of the deaths of many from overhead wires, and the destruction of whole broods from the quickly-moving mowing machine.

For Good or Ill?

The appearance of one or more Magpies is differently construed in different parts of the country, for while in parts of Scotland and the North of England two Magpies are said to bring luck, while one brings sorrow, the following rhyme holds good in a few other localities:

One is joy, two is grief,
Three is marriage, four is death.

The Effect of Cold on Birds.

In consequence of the cold spring weather, small clutches of eggs, small broods of young, and in some cases a single chick, have been much more frequent in the hedgerows than in other years. Possibly full broods of second nests will make up for any deficiency in numbers.

The Strength of a Bird's Egg.

A bird's egg must be wonderfully constructed and the shell exceedingly strong, for when we consider that an unfertile one will bear the strain of several young ones scrambling about over it for at least a fortnight and still remain intact, we can only marvel that it survives such rough treatment. No doubt the shape is its real strength.

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1910 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

The breeding season here is fairly good, writes Mr. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream, N.B.). Mr. Duncan, Mr. Gilchrist, and myself are having good rounds of Borders so far.

Lancashire and Lizard F.A.

I am pleased to hear that many of our members are having a good breeding season. Mr. Lawton was telling me at the last meeting that he had about 60 young, from 10 hens. Friend "Teddy" Fuller was also telling he did not know where to put his young ones, but as I believe he said he had 65 or 85 hens breeding, he ought to reasonably expect something. Mr. Salway has also about 50 young, and several others are doing very well. Mr. Hampshire is only doing fairly well. Mr. Barnes, of Grantham, is also again in luck's way. My own lot are doing better than usual, but hardly what I should like to see. Mr. Hordern is in luck's way with his Lancashires, but Mr. John Vickers is only doing badly.—JOHN RUKIN, hon. secretary, L. and L.F.A.

Under the White Rose.

MEMBERS' First Feather shows were in full swing at a large number of societies' headquarters on Saturday last, and reports reach me that most of them were fairly successful, a good number of birds being put down, and some real good ones amongst them. Many of the winners are expected to be on duty to-day (Saturday) at Great Horton open show, and prove their superiority or otherwise against all comers.

AT Bradford East Show a novelty turned up in a "White Canary," which I am informed is pure white and pink-eyed, and is much cleaner in colour than the bird which was seen at the Crystal Palace Show. What bothers me about it is, whose colour feed is the owner going to use, or will he keep it on Paris white during the moult?

THE C.M.Y.C.C. and the Y.C.C. both held their committee meetings on Saturday last, the principal business being the fixing of the competitions for the coming season. Will secretaries please look up the reports of the meetings, and work accordingly? Each of these specialist clubs is making a bold bid for popularity, and providing plenty of specials of good value for competition amongst their members, the novices in particular being very well catered for. It is quite evident they mean to scure their fair share of support for the 800 odd novice members of the Yorkshire Union.

BRADFORD WEST had not such a very big turn-up of members at their meeting and lecture on Saturday last, but the few that were there thoroughly enjoyed themselves, the discussion afterwards being very interesting. The lecturer, Mr. S. Dean, closed his remarks by inviting Mr. W. A. Cowgill to give some details and experiences in regard to colour feeding before the times of pepper feeding. This was readily responded to by Mr. Cowgill, and proved a most instructive addition to the evening's entertainment.

WILD birds this season seem to be having a fairly good time. In Wharfedale from Boston Spa away to Grassington, which includes Otley, Ilkley, and Bolton Abbey and Woods, the birds are in great numbers—Kingfishers, Dippers, with great host of Chaffinches, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and such like. Then the Sand Martins in the river banks are busy breeding, and to see them skim the water in search of insect life is indeed a treat, by comparison making the flying of mere man an ugly and strenuous show. Starlings—nests full of them—scream from every hole in tree or wall, whether near human habitations or not. These birds, to my mind, must have increased tremendously during the last few years. But to hear sweet music from birdy throats, give me the evening twilight, when the Song Thrushes and Blackbirds vie with each other in song across the river, and from tree to tree.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

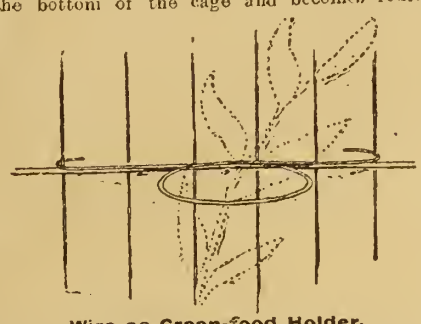
MR. ROOSEVELT AND THE BIRDS.

Mr. Roosevelt is indeed a many-sided man, and besides his liking for lions and tigers and other denizens of the jungle, is passionately fond of bird-life. Indeed, so keen is he on ornithology that he spent the last twenty-four hours of his visit to this country in the New Forest, in company with Sir Edward Grey (the Foreign Secretary) studying British birds in their native haunts, and the ex-President, despite being caught in a heavy rainstorm and getting soaked through to the skin, stated that it was the "grandest experience he had had during his sojourn in Europe." The following interesting account of the genial "Teddy's" country ramble is taken from the "Daily Express":—

"That walk through the New Forest was the crowning pleasure of my three months in Europe," said Mr. Roosevelt, with his characteristic smile. I am very fond of outdoor life, and have always taken a great interest in ornithology, so I wanted before I left to see and hear your British birds. I know the birds of my own country, but until now I have only known of English birds from books.

"Sir Edward Grey asked me if I would like to explore the New Forest with him, and I jumped at the chance. So we caught the train to Basingstoke, and got there about one in the afternoon. From then until a quarter to nine, when we reached the Forest Gate Hotel at Brockenhurst, we had a perfectly lovely time. A motor-car took us to the edge of the Forest—up the valley of the Itchen, the most gloriously wooded country—and then Sir Edward and I rambled about just as the fancy took us. We didn't go in a straight line, or along any particular road. We zigzagged about and cut across country, and wandered into copses and thickets, where the song birds are.

"Sir Edward and I saw and heard many different kinds of birds, which were a delight to me. We knew them by their different songs. I heard your beautiful English Lark, and I saw many British birds that were new to me. I saw the Tufted Duck, the Chiff Chaff, and some old English Owls. I did not hear the Nightingale on this ramble, but I have heard it in England at other times."



Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

A Green-food Holder.
Sent by Mr. E. Kelly, The Green, Pembroke, S. Wales.

The accompanying sketch shows a little device which when made properly will be found extremely useful to all keepers of birds. When birds are given natural food such as groundsel, hardheads, plantain, etc., it is usual to place it between the bars of the cage, but, as many fanciers are aware, the birds begin picking it, and in nine cases out of ten it drops down to the bottom of the cage and becomes fouled.

Wire as Green-food Holder.

To prevent this, take a piece of fairly stout wire, of suitable length, and bend it as shown. The loop can easily be formed by twisting the wire round a cylinder. Then bend the one end but let the other be at right angles. Hook the bent end round one of the bars of the cage inside. Next bend the other end round the most convenient bar, and the job is done. The cage is fitted with a very useful holder for all natural foods, which will be found to save a deal of trouble and will prevent waste.

Shelf for Egg, etc., Pots.
Sent by B. Wharton, 51, Parrott Street, Longsight, Manchester.

To make this shelf for egg pots, get two pieces of wood, 3 feet 6 inches long, by ⅜ inch thick, one piece 3½ inches and the other 2½ inches in width. Nail or screw the narrow one to the other, to form a back. Then get some ¼-inch square lengths, and nail on to the larger widtb to make divisions—3½-inch division for large pots (double feeders) and 2⅜-inch for small, as sketch. Then put two brass ears on the back so you can fix the shelf up on the wall in your bird-room. A side view is given in the small sketch. This size is for six of each kind; of course you can make it any length to suit the number of pots you have. My own is 5 feet long, and holds 22 pots. If painted black and numbered to your cages, it is very useful during the breeding season.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

*Blue Tit and Canaries.

My father keeps a lot of Canaries, and there is a little Blue Tit which comes to our window every morning and tries to get in with them. I throw out a few crumbs for it occasionally. It has now found a little mate, and has made a nest in the window-frame. It is a dear little creature.—Sent by W. H. Mayhew (age 7), Upwell, Wisbeck, Cambs.

The Happy Wren.

A little Wren sat on the twig of a tree,
A-swinging and singing as glad as could be,
And shaking his tail and smoothing his dress,
And having such fun as you never could guess.

And when he had finished his gay little song,
He flew down in the street and went hopping along,
This way and that way with both little feet,
While his sharp little eyes looked for something to eat.

Sent by H. Edmondson (age 13), Newcroft Meadows, Urmston, near Manchester.

*Clever Birds

We have an aviary with thirteen birds in it. They are all wild birds, but it is wonderful how tame they are becoming. There is a Greenfinch called "Kelly" and a Bullfinch called "Billy." They know their names, and when you call them they come over to the wire and wait till you give them a seed. They will take nothing but hemp from your hand. I think it very clever of them as we haven't had them very long.—Sent by John Simpson (age 12), 70a, Napierston Terrace, Jamestown, Dumbartonshire.

Monthly meeting held June 4th. A table show of first feather birds was held, but owing to the early date, and also to the fact that a lot of our members are only doing poorly, there were only 28 birds shown in the eight classes provided. There was a very good attendance of members and friends. Messrs. J. R. Beckwith and A. Ellis were elected members. The points specials for table show were won by Messrs. J. Owen (British), E. Norton (Yorks.), and W. A. Wilson (Norwich). Mr. W. Hornby judged.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Seventh annual young bird show, held at the Reindeer Hotel, on June 7th, when, although the date fixed was very early, close upon 100 birds were staged. The Norwich were the strongest section, some grand youngsters being staged, both in the Champion and Novice classes. The Yorkshires were not so strong, many of our members having had a lot of clear eggs on the first round with this variety. In the A.O.V. classes some very fine Cinnamons were shown by Mr. H. E. Tringham, and some very nice Yorkshire Greens, by Mr. Reeks, and Mr. Cunningham put down a very nice team of Borders. Mr. C. Botting took the medal for best bird in show with a very fine Bramblefinch. A large number of fanciers visited the show during the evening, and the catalogue with awards, which Mr. Cole, with his usual smartness, had ready a few minutes after judging, was over, were soon sold out. The secretary, Mr. Hodson, with the help of the committee, had everything well in hand, the show proving a complete success. Mr. T. Heath judged Canaries, and Mr. E. T. Maxwell British, their awards being well received. The committee have decided to hold a second young bird show in July.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

The first of the three young bird shows held under the auspices of this society was held on Saturday, June 11th, in the Fawcett Street Cafe. There were eight classes provided, but owing to the wretched breeding season experienced by the majority of the members, four of the classes had to be cancelled, viz., Yorkshire, Crest, or Crestbred, Cinnamon, and Mules. The remaining four were, however, well filled, and some very nice birds were staged in each section, competition being very keen. Mr. R. H. Dixon judged, and his awards were:—NOR., A.V. Thirteen classes were provided, and some very nice young birds were staged. DALKEITH AND DISTRICT C.C.

Meeting held at headquarters, Ship Inn, on June 4th, Mr. W. B. Smart in the chair, when there was a good turnout of members. Business: To select judges for our show of October 1st, 1910. A number of gentlemen were nominated; it was left to the secretary to write them. Prize cards were next considered, and it was agreed to have them from a Leith firm.—JOHN EWING, Sec.

MID-RHONDDA & DIST. C.B.S.

A meeting held June 4th, Mr. Jelly in the chair. Decided to make our headquarters at Danlser Temperance Bar. The date fixed for our members' show is Nov. 10th. The names of judges were selected for the secretary to correspond with, with a view to securing the services of one for that date. Fanciers rally round and make the show a success. Radius is from Pmntypridd to Treherbert, including the Ferndale Valley and Gilfach Goch. The entrance fee for membership is 1/-, and annual subscription is 5/6, or 1/- per quarter.—G. YEO, Hon. Sec., 1, Upton Terrace, Penygraig.

STOCKTON HEATH O.S.

Special general meeting held June 9th. We had a downright good thunderstorm for it, and all the members seemed to try to make themselves felt as much. I don't want secretaries to envy me, but my members are a jolly lot of fellows. One member (Mr. Nelson) thundered off by presenting the society with the wood material for making staging for shows, if some others would make it. Mr. Walters (seed merchant) offered to find all seed for show, and another member offered to get schedules out, and then the whole of the committee offered to be there for stewards. I think this bottoms the duty of members to societies. We could not stop ourselves. Mr. W. F. Walters kindly consented to give us a lecture on "Seeds for Cage Birds" (also he would bring samples) at our next meeting.—JAMES BRETHERTON, Hon. Sec.

WEST LONDON F.A.

Monthly meeting Bush Hotel, Shepherd's Bush, on June 2nd, Mr. Mugford in the chair. One new member proposed. Schedule for young bird show arranged: Canaries 21 classes, Mule 2, British 4, and Foreign 1. Judge, Mr. J. Robson. Mr. Curtis read a paper on "Hints to Novice Breeders of the Norwich Canary." He spoke at considerable length on the chief faults which a novice should endeavour to keep out of his birds; on double bulling, and "with the nice little bedroom in the top right-hand corner." After the lecture Mr. Curtis was severely questioned on the introduction of the Crest-bred; use of Green blood for producing colour; pedigree, etc. The lecturer, in replying to a very hearty vote of thanks, wished the members, and particularly the novices, every success, and strongly urged them to persevere, because only perseverance would lead to success. A vote of thanks to the chair concluded the meetiug.—J. DEWHURST, Hon. Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Special meeting held on June 4th, at the Wellington Hntel, Hyde. The chief business was the allotment of specials, and also deciding what steps we should take in replacing the two challenge cups that had been won outright. The discussions re the cups, etc., were very animated, keen interest being taken in the subject. This is a good sign that the new blood in the society is likely to have good results. Some excellent suggestions were put forward, and a decisimn was amicably arrived at, full particulars of which will be given after the next meeting, if confirmed. This was the first meeting since March without a new member being proposed, so we hope that a double number will be put forward next meeting. Messrs. H. Oliver, T. White, and J. Mason were confirmed as members. Next meeting at the Rochdale O.S. club room, on July 2nd, in connection with their first feather shnw. Will all societies wanting our patronage let me have application for same at an early date, and then I can put them before my committee at our next meeting. The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman.—J. RUKIN, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHALL F.S.

Annual general meeting held May 26th, when the balance-sheet was read and adopted. The election of officers then took place, and the following were re-elected: President, R. W. Baxter, Esq.; auctioneer, Mr. B. G. Hanson; treasurer, Mr. W. Carter; chairman, Mr. P. Evans. The hon. secretary then stated that as he should not be able to give the necessary time, he should be glad to be relieved of his position, although he would continue to do all he could for the society and the Fancy generally. Mr. A. E. Argyle was then elected hon. secretary. The committee elected were: Messrs. T. Hocken, T. E. Jeffrey, and J. Timberlake (for cage bird section), F. Brooks, A. Smith, C. Brant, A. Allwork, H. W. Allwork, S. Hatt, R. Evans, and W. A. Neale. Silver cups for the different sections were then awarded, the cage-bird cup going to Mr. J. Timberlake with 32 points, Mr. W. Lloyd being runner up with 23 points. Other cup winners were Messrs. A. Allwork and S. Hatt. It was decided to hold six monthly table shows from June to December, when the new cups will be competed for. Votes of thanks were passed to the hon. secretary, chairman, and committee for their services during the past year. The new secretary's address is 2, Victoria-terrace, Lea-road, Southall, where all communications should be addressed.—A. E. ARGYLE.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at 6, The Broadway, on Monday evening, at which Mr. W. H. Stoakley presided; there was a record attendance of between 50 and 60 members and visitors, including a very considerable proportion of the fair sex. The agenda included the election of two new members and the nomination of four. A letter was read from the Cage Bird Union asking the society to give its reasons for withdrawing from the Union. The meeting was not inclined to conform to the request, but ordered the secretary to send a polite acknowledgment. It was decided to adjourn the meetings over the holiday months, August and September, the young bird show to take the place of the meeting on July 4th. The ordinary business was followed by a judging competition of birds bred this season, Mr. R. L. Crisp acting as final judge. The members had brought up a fine lot of some 25 or 30 youngsters for the occasion. Mr. Crisp then gave a most interesting and lucid lecture on the breeding of Yorkshire Canaries, prefacing his remarks by a few brief words anent the exhibits. Then dealing with his subject, he said the longer he was in the Fancy the less inclined he felt to dogmatise; they must not take what he had to say about the Yorkshire Canary as authoritative, but simply treat his statements as being his experiences extending over a number of years. He then, in a masterly manner, dealt with the points of the Yorkshire Canary one by one, and explained the best method of selecting for breeding purposes, strongly warning his hearers against many errors the southern fanciers fall into, and telling them that until they corrected these they would never be able to compete on even terms with their fellow fanciers in the north. At the close a most enthusiastic vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, in reply to which Mr. Crisp said he was most pleased to be present, to see such a large company and so great a proportion of ladies, and to find that the society had such a very comfortable meeting place.—H. SMITH, Sec.

BRIGHTON C.B.S.

Committee meeting held at the King and Queen Hotel on June 8th, Mr. C. Pearson in the chair. Mr. C. A. House was engaged to judge annual show, when we hope to have a first-class entry. The stewards were arranged for first feather show on June 29th. Lord Newlands was elected a vice-president of the association; a vote of thanks to the chairman then closing a very successful meeting.—A. T. RIDDLES, Hon. Sec.

PENTRE AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Full attendance of members at headquarters on June 11th. It was decided to give a silver cup for best bird in table show for British birds, to be held on June 23rd, to be won three times, not necessarily in succession. This show is confined to the area of the Rhondda Urban District Council. It is to be hoped all fanciers will rally around and support our first venture. Entries can be made on a sheet of paper. There will be a meeting June 18th at 8 p.m.—W. THOMAS, Sec.

LOCHORE AND GLENCRAIG.

Meeting held in Burns Tavern, on May 30th, Mr. D. McAulay (vice-president) in the chair. The secretary was instructed to put rule books in printer's hands, and to inform Mr. Jas. Kerr (Dundee) that he was awarded points special in Norwich section at late show. Judges were appointed for poultry and pigeon sections. The first annual drive was fixed to start from Public Hall at 7 a.m. After the business, the chairman intimated that he had a very interesting duty to perform, and after reading a letter of apology from the president regretting his inability to be present, he called on the hon. president, Mr. J. J. McMenemy, and in presenting him with a handsome gold-mounted walking stick, on behalf of the association, said Mr. McMenemy, our worthy president's, letter leaves very little for me to say, since he has touched so fully on your good qualities; suffice that I ask your acceptance of this gift in some acknowledgment of your interest in our association. We all trust you may be long spared to use it. Mr. McMenemy, in reply, thanked the association for their appreciation of the little he had done, and assured them, and all other associations in the district which were conducted on such straightforward lines, of his hearty support at all times. He said that although he was a keen enthusiast himself he had not, up to the present, the necessary time to devote to the hobby, but hoped to be able to give a few entries at our next fixture. He hoped they understood they had the use of Lochore Public Hall any time they required it gratis. A programme of songs was then brought forward by Messrs. J. Gibson, J. McAulay, C. Shoolbred, D. McAulay, and J. Donaldson. A most enjoyable evening was brought to a close by votes of thanks to the hon. president and chairman. JOHN BROWN, Hon. Sec.

The first meeting was held in the Court Room of the Town Hall on June 8th, at 8.30 p.m., when there was a good turn-out of members. It was agreed to run the annual show this year about the same time as in former years, namely, the first Saturday in October. The next meeting was fixed for June 2nd for the purpose of appointing a secretary and office-bearers, and it is hoped there will then be a representative turn-out of the members.—A. B. MCINTYRE.

CHESTER C.B.F.A.

Letter from the Sec. of C.B.U. was read asking for the support of the society, also intimating that he proposed to call a meeting of the delegates to hold a meeting in place of the last one, held at the Palace. It was decided not to hold a young bird show, but to have a bird-washing exhibition, and also a lecture in the autumn.—J. SWINDLEY, 11, East View, Handbridge, Chester.

DARLINGTON C. AND B.B.F.A

Meeting held June 1st, Mr. W. Cartwright presided. It was decided to hold our First Feather Show on June 25th. The following classes were arranged: Norwich, Yorkshire, A.O.V. Canary, Mule or Hybrid, and a class for any special British Hardbill; usual entrance fee; prize money on sliding scale. A paper was read by the Secretary on "Colour Feeding." CITY OF BRADFORD O.S.

On June 4th, at the Flying Dutchman Hotel, before a good attendance of fanciers, Mr. P. Mason, of Windhill, opened a discussion on "Cinnamon-marked breeding." Mr. Mason's remarks created plenty of interest, as no doubt he has bred some of the finest marked birds benched. Messrs Hartley, Wharton, Ludbrook, Hammond, Liugley, and others joined in the discussion. A good idea of Mr. Mason's, re novices not liking to ask question before the company, resulted in questions being elicited from them at the previous meeting, and Mr. Mason dealt with them. Mr. F. Hammond proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Mason, and Mr. J. Hartley seconded, Mr. Mason suitably replied.—F. RHODES, Sec.

DYSART C.B.S.

Meeting held in Victoria Bar Rooms on June 4, to make arrangements for First Feather Show, confined to members. Owing to the members being unsuccessful in breeding, it was decided to alter date of show, which will now be held on August 6 instead of July 2. Mr. J. F. Dewar, Edinburgh, was elected judge. Having been successful in gaining Mr. Dewar's services, fairness will be in the minds of the members. Before bringing the meeting to a close the Secretary presented the society with a handsome silver cup, to be competed for at their next annual open show, October 29. Mr. James Logan proposed a hearty vote of thanks for the handsome trophy they had just received from the Secretary. Mr. D. Walker (president) seconded the proposal, which was very heartily responded to. Mr. George Harris presented the society later with a handsome globe for cup.—JOHN S. HARRIS, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

At the conclusion of the young bird show on June 11th, a special meeting was called to consider a letter received from the secretary of the Cage Bird Union, asking us to reconsider our decision to leave the Union. There was a splendid attendance of members, who were presided over by Mr. J. Farrar. After the letter from the Union secretary was read, the secretary informed the members that he had written to Mr. Lythgoe asking full particulars as to how many societies had withdrawn from the Union, and also asking him why the Yorkshire Union shows should be open to C.B.U. members, while other unaffiliated societies were not, and Mr. Lythgoe's reply was placed before the members. The secretary stated that he did not think it right that C.B.U. members should be allowed to show at Yorkshire Union shows, and not at any other unaffiliated shows, and urged that the only fair way was to delete the latter portion of Rule 22, and allow C.B.U. members to show where they liked. There was no discussion on the subject, and Mr. J. Jeffrey moved, and Mr. R. Heswell seconded, a proposition that: We do not rejoin the Cage Bird Union until the latter portion of Rule 22 is deleted, as we are of the opinion that C.B.U. members should be allowed the same facilities as other fanciers to show where they like. There was no amendment, and the proposition was carried with only three dissentients. Two new members were elected, Mr. Gott and Mr. Murray.—W. REID, Hon. Secretary.

GLASGOW WEST END C.B.C.

Monthly meeting held in Clarendon Hall on June 10th, Mr. A. Miller presiding. For the first feather show, to be held on July 9th, in Clarendon Hall, the following sections were decided on: Crested and Crested-bred, Norwich Plainhead, Border Fancy, Yorkshire, A.O.V. Canary (including self Greens and Cinnamons), Light Mule or Hybrid, and Dark Mule—15 classes in all. The classification, etc., for annual members' show decided on. One new member was enrolled—Andrew McDonald, 21, Rachery-street, Glasgow. Afterwards a paper on "The Norwich Plainhead Canary was read by Mr. Charles Campbell, which proved very interesting and instructive. Mr. Campbell dealt first with his successes and failures, then with matched pairs for breeding, and type and quality of same; the breeding of birds for stock and exhibition purposes; the different foods on which young birds are reared, and his opinions of same. At the conclusion of the lecture Mr. Campbell was asked various questions, which were answered satisfactorily. Mr. Miller, in thanking Mr. Campbell, spoke of him as an experienced breeder and very successful exhibitor, and one very hard to beat when he had any Plainheads on the bench. Members whose name are on the books and have not yet paid their subscription for the year, are reminded that the same must be paid on or before July 9th (first feather show) to enable them to show young birds at annual members' show on November 19th. Hearty votes of thanks to the lecturer and chairman brought a very pleasant evening to a close.—WILLIAM PROUDFOOT, Sec. and Treas., 115, Henderson-street, Glasgow.

Eighth Prize	.. ..	ONE POUND.

Also Twenty Consolation Prizes of a Bound Volume or a Framed Plate, at the Winner's option.

In every copy of "Cage Birds" published from now till July 23rd next, we shall print a triangular coupon. This coupon (see below) is provided with a panel upon each side, each panel must be filled in with the name and address in full of a new reader of the paper. One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each coupon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

For each coupon so sent in with three halfpence in stamps we will send free copies of "Cage Birds" to each of those whose names and addresses appear thereon. Each of these free copies will contain a coupon which in its turn will be available for competition purposes if sent to us properly filled in with three further names and addresses.

RULES.

It must be borne in mind by competitors that:
(1) Each coupon must be legibly and correctly filled up (pencil will do) with the full names and addresses of three new readers of "Cage Birds." (Either actual or possible new readers.)
(2) The prizes will go to the competitors who send in the largest number of properly filled in coupons.
(3) The competition will close finally on Wednesday, July 27th, and no coupons received after first post on that date will be allowed to count in the competition.
(4) The Editor's decision on any point in dispute will be final.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons, which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1s. for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 559
The First Coupon appeared in our Issue of May 28th last.

Annual Outing.

The first of what is hoped to be an annual event, in the form of our country ramble, took place on June 5th. To the members and friends who took part the event was a great success, and a very large number of nests were sighted. The spot selected was Ashtead and neighbourhood, the party numbering twelve, and consisting of Messrs. Yeoman, Sandy, Sexton, Pretty, Brighty, Warley, and Master Warley, Silverthorne, Barker, Robson, and Askew, the hon. secretary. They proceeded through Ashtead village and the delightful highways and byeways to the common. Scarcely had the party left the village and hurried into a shady lane than Mr. Warley sighted a Thrush's nest in the hedge containing eggs. This served to whet the appetite for a vigorous investigation of all the likely bushes and spots in the ivy-clad wall which ran along one side of the lane. Various species of Tits were seen and heard, also the Willow Warbler and Chaffinch, the latter being very much in evidence. Further on the Turtle Dove and Woodpigeon were seen, whilst the familiar note of the Cuckoo was heard in all directions. The common looked very promising, but only resulted in a Linnet's nest being discovered with eggs. A little further on a pretty nest of young Thrushes was found, and the loud call of an old Jenny Wren attracted the attention of some of the party, who discovered the bird in a great state of agitation above a thorn and bramble bush in which were her youngsters, who appeared to have recently left the nest. They quickly made their way into the thick undergrowth, and were lost to view. At this spot the Cuckoo was observed flying over the railway embankment, and a good view was obtained of her with the aid of field glasses. The appetites of the party having been sharpened by the fresh air, a start was made for the "Leg of Mutton and Cauliflower" Inn, where a cold luncheon had been arranged by the hon. secretary, Mr. Askew. After lunch Mr. Yeoman, the chairman, referred to the death of our late King, and proposed the toast of the health of the new Monarch, which was duly honoured. After an interesting discussion upon club and birdy matters, the party again set out for the woods, and were joined by Mr. Pearce of the London and Counties Society, who had come down by a later train. The outskirts of the beautiful wood were followed, and many nests were found, some newly built, others containing eggs or young. The nest of the Chaffinch again appeared to be the most numerous, and probably some 20 were explored. The Greenfinch's nest was also found, also what was thought to be a Stonechat's nest, but some doubt existed as it was found high up in the topmost twig of a tall bush. A Partridge's nest containing 13 eggs was also seen in a clump of stout grass and rushes. Time was now going all too quickly, and the party wended its way to Epsom Town, where a capital tea was found, and the return journey to "bricks and mortar" was made about 8 p.m., all agreeing that a very pleasant and instructive day had been spent.

CANARY QUERIES.

A Trio.

Hurst.—(1) Certainly leave them together until the middle of next month. It is quite possible the hen may nest again, and may be near laying any time, so that it is scarcely safe to separate them just yet. Give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and a pinch of a mixture of equal parts maw and gold of pleasure seed, every second day, and on the alternate days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Give two dandelion leaves daily. In the drinking water give five drops each tincture of gentian, calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week. (2) Am afraid you can do nothing of any service here. But try using a very shallow nest pan until eggs are laid, then when putting hen to sit, substitute one of ordinary depth. (3) As you have already proved the reliability of the Crest-bred cock, you may return him to the hen with safety when the young are three or four days old.

Hard Breathing and Wheezing.

Hard Luck.—You say the bird is in an outdoor aviary, but do not say whether it is in the open air or whether it merely means that you have an outdoor bird room. If the former is the case, I should say seeing that you only bought the bird three weeks ago, that you had brought on acute bronchial trouble by turning the bird outdoors without any acclimatisation. Your best plan now is to remove it indoors to a cosy place, not exposed to any heat from fires, etc., but where it is nice, bright, and sunny, and quite free from all cold draughts, and extreme fluctuations. As a staple diet give one part summer rape to three parts canary. Twice a week give separately half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, black rape, and teazle. Every second day for the next month give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills, and glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, and every second day for another fortnight afterwards.

His Pound of Flesh.

J. W. M.—I cannot hold out much hope of your suggested method of running the cock alternately with three hens for a portion of each day bringing you much, if any, success. It would entail too much disturbance, and give the hens so little time to settle down that they would need to be all in very high breeding condition simultaneously for the plan to be a success. To utilise all three hens you really missed your best chance when hen No. 1 commenced to sit the brood she now has. As soon as she commenced to sit you should have removed the cock, and either mated him with one of the others, or, if both were ready for mating, run him with each one alternately from midday to midday. As you recognise the risk of failure attending the experiment, if you still wish to make it, your best method will be to put the cock and two hens in the three compartment cage, and run him with each one alternately from midday to midday as suggested. Keep the other hen in a single breeder ready for mating, and as soon as one of the other hens has gone to nest run the cock with this hen during the same interval as he was running with the hen who will no longer need his presence.

Not Singing.

Novice. You must first look well into the surroundings of the bird to see whether it is exposed to any cold draughts or other unhealthy influences. Also, see if the cage is troubled with redmites. I note you do not say whether he appears quite healthy or otherwise, nor how long he has been out of song. If only just recently it is probable he is about dropping into moult. Feed for a week on plain canary and a free supply of green food only, and add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of syrup of rhubarb to its drinking water every second day. After this, add a fourth part of summer rape to the staple diet; give a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with gold of pleasure seed every second day for a month, and twice a week a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, black rape, and millet. Give a little green food every second day after the first week, and in the water give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day during the second week.

A Variety.

A. M. Johnson.—I suspect the hen which lays only two or three small eggs in each clutch is an old one, past her serviceable breeding days. If she goes to nest again, omit all egg and other soft foods whilst going to nest, and in place of these give only a scrap of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed every second day. As green food give only a half ripe plantain stalk, or a small leaf of dandelion every second day. For the first week withhold greenstuff altogether, and add six drops of tincture of gentian and six of dandelion juice to the drinking water every second day. If she does not seem anxious to nest again voluntarily, do not press her to do so. Put her in a large flight, feed liberally until after the moult, then plainly until spring, to get her into good hard condition for next season. The length of time a hen can remain off the eggs without them being destroyed depends upon the weather, stage of incubation, vitality of germs, and suchlike influences, that it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast line. The only wise course is to let eggs be sat upon the full time. At time of writing this, I have a brood hatching off all right, which on two occasions during incubation have been left totally uncovered for more than an hour. I will not dogmatise as to the possibility of a hen Mule laying fertile eggs. It may not be impossible, but it certainly is very improbable. Some people imagine every marked or green Canary is a Mule—perhaps your friend is of that opinion. Still, several cases of fertility in Mules of apparent authenticity are on record.

Making a Start.

F.L.—(1) Yes, you could certainly keep Canaries and British seed-eaters in the house you describe without artificial heat of any kind. In starting with Canaries, however, you should be sure you are getting stock which has been kept in a normal temperature. The present will be a very good time to begin in any case. (2) It is quite a matter of personal taste how you finish the inside walls and fittings. Use any good washable distemper for the walls. I should say a dado of autumn green, and the upper portion light pea-green or electric green, with a border line of paper, would look better and more cosy than white and mahogany. Do not make the dado half way up the wall; two-fifths would be plenty, and look better.—(3) Yes, cages, and all other fittings, would look well done in mahogany. (4) If, as I understand your letter, the house is already built, I do not see how the aspect can matter much now. Still, south-west, or south-south-east, would be much better than due south. The latter position is excellent also provided there is some shade from the sun during the middle part of the day in the height of summer. (5) I have not noted minutely what amount of seed a given number of birds will consume, but for forty-five birds you may put the quantity down at somewhere between four and five pounds per week. With this you would probably use but a minimum amount of egg food and other extra tit-bits. (6) Certainly, if the seeds are well harvested and dry when put in air-tight tins they should keep perfectly fresh and sweet until used, or any reasonable length of time.

Brevities.

When Colour Feeding (Conn., Canary, U.S.).—No, the usual staple diet of seeds must be neither withheld nor diminished when colour feeding. Make the colour food tasty and palatable to the birds, and they will consume all that is needed to attain the object without in any way adopting coercive measures or taking away the seed supply.

Percher (Paradox).—Your query is already replied to. As you will see, I suspected an error had been made about the size of perches, and replied accordingly. One and a-half inches circumference is much nearer the mark, and you will probably find that this closely coincides with the size I have recommended in the other reply.

Nibbling Cage (Renfrew).—There is nothing wrong with the bird. It is only a habit which some "unattached" birds get into during the breeding season to help to work off some of the superfluity of energy and spirits which posesses them at this time. Give a liberal supply of green food, especially lettuce and chickweed, and cut all hemp out of the dietary. This will allay the thirst, though I do not think there is anything abnormal.

Yorkshire Hen Bald (S. C. E. N.).—Paint the bare place twice a week for the next two or three weeks with a small feather dipped in a mixture of equal parts glycerine and tincture of perchloride of iron. Beyond this you can do nothing now but feed the bird liberally, and get it into a thoroughly good condition of health for the moult. It is very doubtful if any improvement will be seen until the bird moults. Allow it to bathe quite freely; see that its cage is quite free from insect pests; and in addition to the usual seed diet, and a liberal supply of green food in variety, give a small teaspoonful of egg food once each week, and dust it over with a mixture of two parts flowers of sulphur to one part chlorate of potash. On two other days each week give a quarter teaspoonful of maw seed.

Biddy's Folly (S. McCore).—I doubt whether the hen will do anything this season. Separate her for a fortnight, but keep her in view of the cock. For the first week feed on a staple of plain canary seed only, with a supply of chickweed and dandelion daily, and a piece of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed the size of a hazel nut every second day. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence (or a crystal the size of a split pea) every second day. During the second week add half a teaspoonful of summer rape to the diet each day when giving bread and milk, and sprinkle the latter with soft sugar. On the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of two parts each hemp and inga, and one part each gold of pleasure and sesame. In the drinking water give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid. If then in good active condition, and the cock is still fit, mate them up and try again.

Disturbing Birds (K. O'Connell).—Your query is somewhat vague, and I am not quite clear how you propose changing the birds about. Anyway, as the main point of your question is the advisability of returning the cock to the hen who is just due to hatch, so that he may help to rear the young, I should not advise you to do it. The hen is more likely to rear the young successfully by herself, and there is a certain risk in returning the cock now that he will worry the hen to begin nesting again. It is not unlikely that by the time this brood is ready to leave the nest the hen will be dropping into moult, and another brood consequently out of the question.

Old and Young (L.C.R.).—Sorry, but there is not the slightest chance of anything you could do curing the blindness in the hen. Keep her in the same cage, and her food and water easily getatable, and then she will get along comfortably enough even if the blindness should attack the other eye, too, as is quite probable it will do. In the latter case she would be useless for breeding, and even as she now is it is a very unwise policy to breed with her. The blisters on the young one were due to an uncommon, though not very rare, disease known as emphysema. You did quite right to get the blisters punctured. That was all that was needed in so young a subject.

Out of Song (Silent). See that the bird is not too near the fire, so as to be exposed to great variations of heat and cold continually. You might also do well to examine the structure of cage carefully to see if there is any secret harbour for red mites, especially about the perch ends and joints of door. Feed as advised to "Novice" for a month, but mix equal parts maw and gold of pleasure to add to the sponge cake. For green-food give seedy chickweed and half-ripe plantain stalks. Let him bathe daily in warm weather, and soak a few quassia chips in the bathing water overnight, one each week. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea, and six drops of dandelion juice every second day for a week, and after this give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid in the water every second day for a week.

Choice of Room (Spider).—If both the rooms you send sketches of are equally dry and free from draughts, I should give preference to the one you are using, marked "present bird-room." The other room I do not think can be quite so free from draughts as this one, and the extra sunlight in the afternoon, combined at it is with a rush of temperature upwards, is no advantage at all. It might be a little advantage, if the plan is feasible, to move your cages nearer the middle of the south wall, opposite the window. The death of the bird you mention in the former bird-room may, and I am inclined to think it does, show that the room is very subject to extreme fluctuations, coincident with the influence prevailing outside. In that case death was probably due to pneumonia caused by a chill.

Uncommon Fosters (A. D. P., Hamilton).—Yes, I should say the green Linnet, as you term the Greenfinch, would be quite equal to the task of rearing the young Canaries after they were hatched, and would probably do it equally as good as, if not better than, the real parents. Unless these fosters are situated in a quiet, safe place, where you can keep a close watch on them, and place the nest and young in a cage when they are in danger of scurrying out of the nest, and leave them on the spot for the fosters to finish off through the wires, you will need to take them in charge about twelve days old, and finish rearing them by hand. It would be best to do this in any case, as the young will probably be very wild if left for the foster parents to rear to maturity. Feed them about every hour on the ordinary egg food made into a moist paste with a little water, and a little finely chopped greenstuff mashed, and mixed in it.

A Pensioner (H. W. Schofield).—The hen has probably retired from active service, and intends remaining on the superannuation list henceforth. The only way in which I think you might do anything with her would be to turn her into a good-sized aviary where she could get plenty of healthy exercise, and find more distractions to turn her attention from the larder. Then, with a vigorous young cock to woo her affections, she might take a more rational turn. You might try giving her a staple of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and otherwise treating the same as advised to "W.H.D.," with the exception that you should omit the hemp altogether from the seed mixture. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda every second day for a week, and on the alternate days six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid.

Irritable (Anxious).—Examine cage minutely. If you find any places covered with minute white specks you may be sure a horde of red mites are in harbour close by. Probe all likely cracks and joints, and the spaces between the top and bottom of doors, etc., on to a piece of white paper, and note the result. If mites are found overhaul the cage. Also catch the bird and see if it has any grey lice upon it; if these are numerous you will very soon find them swarming about your hand. In this case treat as advised to "H. Spooner." Give a bath with quassia twice a week. Give a small piece of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a week, and on alternate days add to its drinking water a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. Give a spray of chickweed daily.

Toes Turned Under (T. Denton).—I take it from your letter that all the fore toes are turned under. In that case you can do nothing save trying a mechanical device such as appeared in our columns on two occasions some little time ago (I have not the dates by me). Look up a few months back numbers, if possible. I give you this hint for what it is worth. Personally, I have no confidence in these devices, as the birds will not leave them alone. Give it a thin perch about the size of a lead pencil to roost on, also one flat one half-inch by quarter inch, with just the sharp edges taken off. If you find the bird begins to roost on the thin perch substitute another similar one, but slightly thicker, for the flat one.

Cock Not Ready (No Nom-de-Plume).—You do not say whether the Norwich cock is in song or not, or whether it appears to be in good health. Provided it is an undoubted cock, and is healthy and active, even if it does not sing much there is no reason why he should not breed successfully. It is always a more promising sign, however, when they are in good lusty song. In addition to the usual seed diet give a small teaspoonful of egg-food with a pinch of a mixture of equal parts gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Every day give three or four crisp young dandelion leaves. Continue this treatment until the hen has gone to nest. You may give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea in the water for two days.

Not Breeding (W. S.).—You do not say whether the hen to which the cock is mated is in good active condition and apparently ready for breeding. If this is so, it is quite possible that the cock is sparing his attentions for the other unmated hen. You should move her right out of earshot, if possible, when things may take a more favourable turn with the other hen. Or if you are not particular as to choice of hens you might remove the hen with which the cock is paired and substitute the other one. There is yet time to get a brood from either of the hens, but whether the one now mated will go to nest is a question that only time can solve. You may treat her as advised to "S. McCore." The cock will resume his song when again caged separately.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., etc.

The American Nightingale.

Bird Lover (Waterford).—The song of the Virginian Nightingale or Cardinal has been much exaggerated by many writers, though doubtless in its native wilds and also in a large garden aviary, in the full fervour of its love song, the notes would sound buoyant and rich, and the very abandon with which it would be poured out at this period would enhance its melody. The notes are rich and full, and there is little variety; it is a repetitious. Nevertheless, not monotonous; some individuals do little more than utter an occasional call note in a cage. Diet: Ripe fruit, a seed mixture of three parts each canary and white millet seed and one part each oats, hemp and sunflower seeds; green food and a few live insects daily. The cage ought to be not less than 24 inches long by 18 inches deep and high, with twiggy branches as perches. They are extremely beautiful, and I have seen very steady and healthy specimens kept under such conditions.

Treating Newly-purchased Grey.

A. W. Anderton.—It all depends what age the Grey Parrot is when purchased, as if very young, boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day) will be necessary for a time, though as soon as possible it should be gradually weaned on to the dry seed mixture—if it is having boiled maize (you must ascertain this when purchasing) you must give this, also seed mixture, and when you see it eating heartily of the latter, gradually discontinue the former. Diet: A seed mixture of two parts each canary and white millet seeds, and one part each hemp, oats and sunflower seeds, the whole to be well mixed together; ripe fruit, plain biscuit, and nuts; keep a piece of cuttlefish hanging in the cage. Do not at first leave water in the cage, but let it have a few sips three or four times daily till it has become accustomed to same. It must be kept warm, but not in a vitiated atmosphere. Very many of these birds become infected during transit to this country, hence the numerous deaths with this species.

Baldness in Foreign Finches.

Lanark.—I may briefly say that as a rule those you refer to are anything but authorities on the treatment of birds, hence the numerous losses with new purchases. I have not my previous reply by me, but I should certainly advise isolating the bald birds till they are in feather again, as many of these caged Finches act as if they had a special mission to keep their fellow-captives bald once they become so. At this season give them all the fresh air you can without subjecting them to draught. A roomy cage is an important adjunct to Gouldian, Painted—in fact, all the Grassfinches, and it should be preferably of the box or semi-box type, and not less than 24 x 12 x 18 inches high. Twiggy branches should be used as perches—in all other respects our previous reply will meet the case.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Birds for Aviary.

Durham Aviarian.—You have accommodation for about a dozen birds the size of a Norwich Canary, or double the number of small Waxbills and Ornamental Finches. I should suggest you procuring pairs of Zebra Finches, Rufous and Long-tailed Grassfinches, Bronze Mannikins, Gold-breasted Waxbills, and Green Singing Finches. The best Britishers to associate with the above are: Linnet, Twite, Redpoll, and Goldfinch. The foreigners would require canary and white millet seed, also millet sprays, green food, such as grass in flower (seeding grass), lettuce, and any non-poisonous garden and hedgerow weeds—sprays of blightly foliage from any non-poisonous tree, bush, or plant will be greatly appreciated. I should also supply a little ripe fruit, such as banana, apple, and any other of our English fruits as are in season. You could not have a better time than the present in which to stock your aviary.

Java Cockatoos.

E.D.G.—(1) I do not think these birds will ruin each other to any appreciable extent; this can soon be tested by keeping them in separate rooms; then, if all goes well, keep the one most suitable, and advertise the other. There are very few species of Parrots or Cockatoos that can be kept together without screaming and becoming more or less of a nuisance, and for a house pet a single bird is far preferable, and I certainly advise you to try them apart, and then retain the quietest and most intelligent of the two. (2) These birds are very seldom on offer; in fact, it has been quite a considerable time since I saw one on the market, and the price is consequently variable and not low; in fact, I should say from 60s. upwards, according to condition and how many came to hand. An advert might secure you one from some private individual, but would be more costly.

Treating a Grey Parrot.

J.L.M.—Cease giving the milk at once—give only water to drink. You must continue to give the boiled maize until the bird is eating heartily of the dry seed mixture, to accustom it to the dry seed. I should put both the boiled maize and dry seed side by side in the same tin. Diet: In addition to boiled maize (this should be only temporary) supply seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts and plain biscuit, also keep a piece of cuttlefish hanging in the cage. For the present I should spray the bird, choosing a warm, genial day for the purpose, and keeping carefully out of draught till dry. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. You will find a cheap book on Parrots advertised weekly in our pages. Keep the birds in a warmish and equable atmosphere, yet not in a vitiated atmosphere. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also teach it by constant repetition of such words and phrases you wish it to learn—when it is restful and quiet is the best time to choose.

Erecting an Aviary.

G A.C.M.—Your suggestions if carried out will answer quite well, and will be a success, but I should have 2ft. of each end of front boarded up, with a wooden partition extending 2ft. inwards, forming two small shelters; there should also be a small window inserted in each end, covered with wire netting on the inside. Half-inch mesh wire netting will be required; all glass should be covered with wire netting on the inside. You will have accommodation for about 50 birds the size of a Norwich Canary; the number can be materially increased if the majority of the birds are small Waxbills and Ornamental Finches. I should suggest procuring pairs of the following as opportunity offers, and the sooner they are put out the better they will be established for the winter: Zebra Finches, Ruficauda Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Common and Green Avadavats, Gold-breasted and St. Helena and Orange-cheek Waxbills, Chestnut Finches, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins. A pair each of Diamond Doves and Chinese Painted Quails could also be added, and form a pleasing contrast to the Finch-like birds. "Foreign Birds for Beginners" with the book you have will suffice.

About Budgerigars.

Conn Budgie.—(1) A compatriot of yours I know imports cocoanut husks for his birds, but probably this may not be convenient to you. Make a small box about six inches square, with a 1½ inch hole for entrance near the top on one side; the bottom of the box must be thick and hollowed out on the inside so that the eggs will keep at one given centre. Such boxes answer quite well, but in my opinion are not equal to the husks. I am also of the opinion that husks are now obtainable in the States, but Mr. Beebe, of the New York Zoo, would be able to tell you if that is so. (2) Included under No. 1. (3) My Budgies, in consequence of being part of a mixed fraternity, have access to hemp, rice, dari, oats, and sunflower seeds in addition to the regulation diet, and under the conditions named I should suggest you trying the two mixtures, at any rate in the winter, viz., Canary and white millet in equal parts, and the mixture given above also in equal parts. A little ripe apple should be given when greenfood is not available. (4) Autumn. (5) No, save as much flowering grass (seeding grass) as you can induce them to take. (6) No, but if you can get wheat or tall grass to grow, they will roll in this—mine do—also remain in the open portion of aviary during a shower with wings outspread. Our pamphlet, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," would be very helpful.

Brevities.

Are they Bengalese? (Julius).—From your description I should certainly say they are as above, and if you have a true pair will undoubtedly nest. Any small travelling cage will answer for a nesting receptacle, and you can supply hay and grass as building material. There are three varieties of Bengalese, viz., pure white, fawn and white, and dark chocolate-brown and white, white being the general body colouring, splashed variously as above. I do not remember that this species has been figured in colour in CAGE BIRDS.

Birds for Large Flight Cage (Marword).—(1) Six birds the size of a Canary, or 12 Waxbills or small Ornamental Finches; you could keep three pairs of Waxbills with the four young Canaries. (2) I should advise a pair each of Avadavats (Tiger Finches), Green Avadavats, and Gold-breasted Waxbills—value 4s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. per pair. (3) You must supply white millet and millet sprays in addition to the Canary diet; flowering grass (seeding grass) and chickweed are the most appreciated greenfood. A blighty spray from either a rose bush or fruit tree is greatly appreciated when available. A little of any kind of ripe fruit they will take is very wholesome. Use twiggy branches for perches.

Budgerigars Not Breeding (Blaydon).—You would find our booklet on Budgerigars very helpful. Your diet is satisfactory, but the red millet can very well be dispensed with. Undoubtedly they will settle down all right a little later, but I should advise putting the next three unbroken eggs you get in the husk, and also hang up another husk at the opposite end of the cage. Budgies, like many other species, are more erratic in a cage than in an aviary, but it is by no means uncommon for them to be so bad. Give them a small turf of seeding grass once or twice a week, also a little lettuce when available. Apart from above I can only advise patience, and luck will ultimately come your way.

Treating Young Grey Parrot (Wightman).—Your bird may not be further troubled with the parasites. However, to be on the safe side, give three doses of areca nut powder (as much as will lie on a sixpence), mix the powder with a little syrup into the form of pellet (about the size of an ordinary pill), and again direct to the mouth—there must be two days' interval between the doses. Follow this with a course of Parrish's Chemical Food, by well colouring the drinking water with same. In addition to your present diet, give some ripe fruit daily. Consult its taste; if it refuses one kind, try another. Also give a little plain biscuit, just moistened by being dipped in water, or when you are giving the chemical food in the water immerse the biscuit in same before offering to the bird.

Cockatiels and Ringnecks (Bircag).—It is not well either to keep too many species of Parrakeets together, or to mix other families with them; nevertheless, I have taken the risk myself, and have successfully kept Doves, Cardinals, and Foreign Thrushes with them. However, as you wish to breed, I should not overdo it. Add to your present stock pairs of Rosella and Redrump Parrakeets, and also pairs of Green and Red-crested Cardinals, and a couple of pairs of Doves, say, Diamond or Peaceful, and White-winged Doves. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary and white millet seed in equal parts, also a second mixture of oats, hemp, sunflower, paddy rice, and dari in equal parts; keep a constant supply of each in the aviary. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts, cuttlefish, plain biscuit, and greenfood. The Quails and Cardinals will require a few mealworms or other live insects and a little soft food mixture. In each aviary it will do no harm if they partake of each other's foods.

A Feather Eater (Myosotis).—The bird has been improperly dieted, I should say, and the best remedy will be to give a cooling aperient as often as possible, but the condition of the birds' bowels must regulate the frequency of the doses—the voidings must not be allowed to remain watery loose. Use Dinneford's Magnesia, diluting it for use with double its bulk of water. Paint the bare parts with Spratt's Pennacura, and syringe the bird twice a week, keeping it out of all draughts till dry. The Roseate Cockatoo is a hardy species, and only needs to be protected from draught. Confine its diet to seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts and plain biscuit. Do not give tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. You had better report progress a fortnight hence with full details.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Sexing Young Mules.

Sidney Webb.—It is not easy to tell the sex of any variety of Canary Mule when in nest feather. As I have often stated, there are no "sure" outward sex differences in young Goldfinch-Canary Mules which help beginners to decide. The only really safe plan is for them to keep the youngsters until their song proves their sex. The cock Mule is always brighter in plumage than the hen; but this is only comparative and helpful in trying to sex youngsters which come out of the same nest. A young hen Mule, for instance, bred from a yellow hen Canary, will often look a much better colour than a real cock Mule, but which has been bred from a buff hen. The young cocks are bigger (as a rule), longer headed, and have more "swagger" than the young hens, and these two things, in addition to the colour sign, help the old fanciers to decide with almost certainty between the cocks and hens in young which come from the same parents. After the moult, of course, the cocks easily out-do the hens in colour, especially about the head (blaze); and then they very soon begin to sing.

Feeding Young Mules.

Novice (Ilkley).—This is a very oft-answered question. Briefly (note recent issues for very full details): When they are commencing to feed themselves offer (in addition to soft food) maw seed, lightly cracked canary and hemp seeds, groats (or coarse oatmeal) shelled and broken up sunflower seed; also seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's-purse and groundsel; and thistles in season. Don't, at the same time, forget grit and cuttlefish, likewise old, crushed mortar. All crushed seed should be prepared fresh daily. I should wean them off egg food as soon as possible, substituting for it home-made egg cake, moistened, if necessary, with a spot or two of milk or of water, or a little stale sponge cake, or crushed sweet biscuit (maizena wafer, tea or Osborne), also moistened with milk. Egg cake made and baked at home really does not need damping. Don't make the mistake, when dropping egg, of leaving off soft food entirely. Steep some summer rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a towel before offering it to the birds. This is very good, especially where anyone experiences difficulty in getting green-food regularly, for which it is to a certain extent a substitute.

Hoopoe as a Pet.

Inquirer.—Hoopoes are certainly very attractive pets; but I must warn you that they have their disadvantages. For instances, if the Hoopoe you get is an adult-caught specimen, then I do not think you will get it to eat artificial food (that is, the prepared softbill mixture of biscuit, etc.), except, maybe, after very considerable trouble. This is the great drawback to the keeping of this species. You will have to provide it with mealworms and whatever other suitable live-foods you can obtain (small garden worms, beetles, gentles, wasp grubs, etc., are all relished). Otherwise you will find the bird "go light" and die. It is a hard job to get even the hand-reared Hoopoes to eat artificial food; their manner of feeding, for one thing, is against them. My own I gave scalded "Melox" reduced to the consistency of paste with a good quality insectivorous food. This I made into pellets (either round or oblong), and gave in a deep jar (an old honey-pot). Whatever was left over each day I fed to my Thrush, or Magpie, or Waxwing. I have had a good number of Hoopoes, and though very beautiful and interesting, I found they required a great deal of attention, and time bestowing on them. The cage should be very large, allowing of a "fly" being taken from end to end. There must be a big sand-heap in it (4 to 6 inches deep), for the birds to dust and play about in. They never seem to drink or bathe, but all mine seemed delighted to be sprayed lightly now and again. They raised regular sand-storms afterwards. Lean meat cut into strips is also eaten, I may say; while just recently I was reading in the "Avicultural Magazine" of a lady who met with success on trying curd, in which she mixed soft food; her bird liked it.

British Bird Queriists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

A Nuthatch.

Sitta.—The richness of colour and clearness of markings are sure signs of a cock bird. The female resembles the male, but is much paler all over in her colours. There is no regulation size and pattern of show cage. A box-pattern cage, about 16in. long by 14 high by 9 wide, would answer well, with a piece of bark (as flat as possible) fixed to the back so that the bird cannot get behind it, and water and food vessels which fit inside, preferably swinging from the front. The inside and wires should be enamelled a warm cream colour. In the stock cage I strongly advise you to have two pieces of cork (or "bark," as some term it) and change them fairly frequently, thoroughly scalding the one last used with boiling water, or stoving it for a time in a fairly warm oven. This is necessary to keep down insect pests. The bird is very fond of bathing, and should be allowed to freely. Its main food should be good quality insectivorous mixture, such as is supplied to small softbill birds, moistened with grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, or other green-food. Several very good "soft-foods" will be found advertised in our columns. Suitable live-foods must also be given, according to season, and a few small nuts (cracked, if necessary) and sunflower and hemp seeds. One bird I had, possessed a wonderful appetite, and very varied tastes. He liked (in addition to the above things) hard-boiled eggs, bits of cake, currants and things, all sorts of nuts (especially the mixed shelled nuts from the greengrocers), mealworms, live ants' eggs, wasp grub, gentles, flies and tiny beetles, and many kinds of fruit, peeled grapes being considered a great delicacy, apparently. A good bird stands a fair chance on the show bench.

A "Show" Bullfinch.

Novice (Cork).—If your bird has all the good points you describe, it certainly ought to do well on the show bench. It is early for it to be commencing to moult; still, that is not to the bird's disadvantage. A seed mixture alone is of no use in "getting up" a Bullfinch for show; much more depends on the wild seeds and berries, and the way in which he is moulted. I fancy many of the owners of show Bullies give them a little sweet pepper. It can be given amongst their seed if the bird won't eat soft food, and most of them will do this. If natural colouring agents be used, Bullies should have a free daily supply of all the fruits and berries with colour in them, especially blackberries (in both red and black stages) and privet berries; in addition to these you have straw, rasp, elder, mountain ash (rowan), dew and other berries, black currants, and cherries, etc., to say nothing of the wild seeding plants, I am so frequently recommending, such as ripe plantain, dock, thistles, heather tops (where possible), shepherd's purse, chickweed, mouse-ear, groundsel tops, etc. Let your bird bathe freely. A most important point in the production of gloss on the plumage is a free use of the bath. If your Bullie is lax in this respect, he must be lightly sprayed every day with a fine sprayer (such as barbers use for bay rhum, etc), which may be bought from most fanciers' specialists advertising in our columns. Never drench the bird! The stock seed mixture should be canary three parts, teazle two parts, linseed, summer rape and charlock one part each, by measure. Sunflower and safflower seeds should be offered fairly liberally, cracked, if necessary. The seed can be run through a seed mill, and have a little sweet pepper mixed amongst it; as you are somewhat early for the berries, I should adopt this method. Don't give hemp.

Feeding Birds in Aviary

Nom-de-Plume Mislaid.—A reader asks advice concerning feeding a mixed lot of Finches in an aviary; but by some means I have mislaid the letter and forgotten the nom-de-plume. As I have often said, I have found that it is wasteful, consequently expensive, to use a seed mixture in a large aviary containing many species of birds. The best method is to give the principal seeds (say canary, teazle, hemp, summer rape, charlock, and sunflower (or, preferably, a mixture of half-sunflower and half safflower) in separate hoppers or dishes, and put a little of the other seeds in occasionally, by way of a change, or as "tit-bits," as fanciers say. This menu, of course, is for British seedeaters; if any foreigners are put in, then millet seed must be added. If you must have your seed-mixture, then for a varied collection of Finches you will find it difficult to beat this: Canary and teazle three pints each, hemp two pints, summer rape and charlock one pint each, linseed half-a-pint, with about a half-pint of mixed sunflower and safflower seeds, increasing or decreasing the quantity of these latter according to whether the birds eat it all up or not—it depends on the composition of the collection, as some birds like these seeds more than others. The other seeds—niger, maw, wild seeds, etc.—you can give now and again, as indicated above. The exact quantity of hemp should vary according to the season (less in summer than in winter). A little more linseed is also useful during the moult

Mules from a Linnet.

Nonplussed.—It is odd that your cock Canary has failed to fill two lots of eggs, though apparently in good form, especially seeing that the hens is a proved breeder. Is he a late hatched bird of last season? Give the Linnet a trial for the last nest by all means. Let the hen sit for seven days, then remove the nest-box and give her a rest for a few days before putting in the Linnet, who should be in the second compartment (the wire slide between) during that time. Take the cock Canary right out of the room. I have given a lot of hints about muling with Linnets. Have you missed these? The stock mixture now should be: Canary three pints, teazle two pints, summer rape, charlock, and linseed one pint each. A feed of maw and niger and a good wild seed mixture can be given frequently (varied) by way of a change; green food, flowering dandelion tops and the young leaves, also seeding shepherd's purse, chickweed, plantain and groundsel freely. Many good makers put up a special Linnet (or Finch) mixture in packets, and a feed of this occasionally makes an acceptable variation from ordinary stock mixture. To bring them in condition quickly the great "secret" is to give them a daily supply of the best old hemp, and crack it lightly, so that they feed well. Also put in the "tit-bit" drawer daily, a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Two ounces each of gold of pleasure, niger, plantain, sesame, and thistle, one ounce each of mustard (the golden-yellow seed), dandelion, maw, cornflower, and lettuce.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

S.W.—On opening cock Canary, I found a very large clot of blood, the origin of which I should say was the lungs, probably commencing with congestion of these organs, latterly haemorrhage taking place, resulting in its death. The clot was unusually large. On the other hand, it may have arisen from injury; the history you give me would rather suggest it.

W. F. Wilbee.—Cock Canary died of pneumonia, but independent of infectivity. Your dieting is correct. It is due to atmospheric influences, close, muggy weather, inducing congestion of the lungs, which predisposes to inflammation of these organs, but more particularly in susceptible subjects. During hot weather you should limit your diet, and give an occasional dose of glauber salts in the drinking water, which has the action of lowering blood pressure, and so lessening the liability of febrile disease.

F. Morley.—Your birds are suffering from a contagious disease. Give close attention to the cleanliness of your feeding utensils. The disease germ is taken in with the food soiled by the excreta of affected birds. Give each day in the drinking water two drops of Lysol for three days, afterwards following with concentrated infusion of gentian, five drops to each bird, night and morning. Thoroughly scrub and disinfect cages previously occupied by affected birds, and give a little green food when procurable. The liver is the principal seat of disease, portions of it being necrosed, meaning local death affecting certain areas brought about by disease germs. It is a very fatal disease, and you will do well to exterminate it as quickly as possible, or it may run a very prolonged course.

G. Bowden.—You must place your healthy birds apart from the diseased. The bird I examined was suffering from an infectious disease. It was rapidly undergoing decomposition, which made its examination none too easy. Both lungs were affected, and there were blood stains on the coverings of the brain. Actual cause of death was pneumonia; a sequel to contagion. Pay strict attention to cleanliness, particularly of feeding and watering utensils, and place apart the healthy from the diseased. Place in the drinking water two drops of Lysol each day for three days, afterwards following up with vegetable tonic, such as Infusion of Columba five drops night and morning to each bird in drinking water for a week. Disinfect cages in which birds have died by scrubbing and afterwards applying a five per cent. solution of carbolic acid, pure.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Cuttings (A. L. Priest, J. Naden).—Accept our thanks for your kindness.

Keeping Egg Food (G. Dainty).—We have given this before in our columns, but with a cover over the top as the only difference.

An Explanation (J. H. Jowett).—We quite see your point, and the explanation was not really needed, for your goodwill towards us has been proved in many ways already—ways which we thoroughly appreciate.

A Skylark (W. F. Wilbee).—In our "Nutshell" booklet upon the Skylark (post free, 2½d.) you will find full instructions upon feeding to obtain free song. We have had no previous complaints, still, it is generally advisable to use the deposit system.

Long Words and Longer Sentences ("Gilbert McNab," Onchan, Isle of Man).—Your letter is a masterpiece of incoherency. We let our tea-time slip by without the usual cheering cup in an endeavour to unravel its meaning. But even this close attention to business resulted only in a dim notion that it is intended to be humourous. Won't you come to the rescue and explain what it is all about?

Another proof of the wide range of readers of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Frank Thomas (Ramsgate). You published an illustration of the cage I made and exhibited at our show here, with a glass arrangement in the front to prevent litter. I had an application from Lincolnshire within a day or so, asking me to make one for a fancier there. I informed the gentleman that it was not my business, but part of my hobby to make my cages, and not knowing when I could make him one, I offered him the original one, which he accepted and forwarded cash by return. He is now in possession of the cage, and says it is a decided success. So you see, Mr. Editor, what a lot are pleased through CAGE BIRDS. The gentleman is pleased, his wife is pleased (no litter), I am pleased, and I take it you are pleased that it has done some good, and my own wife will be pleased when she gets another cage to take its place. I wish CAGE BIRDS a continuance of the success it has had and rightly deserves.

Tomtit's Strange Nesting Place.

In the box of a cart belonging to Mr. James Loxham, landlord of the Pear Tree Inn at Penwortham, near Preston, a Tomtit has built her nest and laid six eggs. The cart is in daily use for the carrying of bricks, and each morning when the carter lifts up the lid of the box the bird flies away (according to the "Daily Mail") to return when the cart comes back to its shed. The nest has been constructed in an ingenious fashion, so that when the cart is tilted up the eggs will not fall out.

Bullfinch's Curious Nesting Place.

My attention was called recently, writes Mr. C. S. Laidlaw (of Eccle, N.B.) in the "Scotsman," to a Bullfinch which had built its nest in the interior of a well, the only entrance to which was by the inlet provided for the handle. The bird seemed to be quite at home, and had deposited six eggs. Unfortunately, its strange habitation became known to the boys, whose unwelcome attentions ended in "Bully" prematurely forsaking its curious nesting place. The well was only used for supplying the cattle while the field in which it is situated was in pasture. Perhaps some of your readers can tell of equally queer nesting places used by the Bullfinch.

A Hatching Result.

SIR,—On the 25th April I put a buff cock with a dark marked hen. They seemed to pair all right, and the hen laid on May 2nd; but on the 9th the hen, not having laid again, I moved the cock to a champion green hen which was ready. The marked hen then laid again on the 12th, 13th, and 14th. I put the egg laid ten days before along with these, and marked it, and let the hen sit. Result: First egg clear, the other three, two fine young ones and one dead in shell. The two young ones are coming out of nest to-day.

BLACKBURN.

Is it Right to Take Ten Pounds for a Canary?

SIR,—That was the poser I recently heard put by one fancier to another. Neither had anything of that kind to sell, and as I listened it occurred to me it was a case of "sour grapes." It is very encouraging to secure a ten-pound note by the sale of a Canary, and the man who would not take it if he got the chance would be a fool. I think the Fancy should be self-supporting. When a man sets out in search of a bird he should have the money in his pocket ready to produce. The cash has the first influence in effecting a purchase. If a man rears a good Canary he is entitled to a ten-pound note. What say your readers?

A BREEDER.

The Type of the Lancashire Canary.

SIR,—When I wrote on the above subject at the first I did so with the intention of giving a good hint to those fanciers that possess the Crest-cum-Lancashires, and know it, to keep same at home and not exhibit them as "test cases." I notice Mr. Adams says that he is certain next season we shall find some other fanciers testing the judges with the same class of bird. I hope and trust the judges will be more alert next season, and disqualify any doubtful specimen that is put on the bench. I would like to suggest that the Lancashire Canary societies take particular notice of any member that is disqualified, and, if possible, bring out some rule that would make an example of them. This, in my opinion, is the only way to get the true type of the Lancashire Canary at the top.

HORSESHOE.

The Scottish Crest Club.

SIR,—As I have been induced to again take up the secretaryship of the above Specialist Club, I would crave your indulgence in granting me a small space in the columns of your valuable journal for the purpose of making a special appeal to all Crest fanciers north of the Tweed, soliciting their co-operation and support in our desiro and endeavour to raise the status of the club. There has been of late a very noticeable falling off in enthusiasm by the fanciers of this very interesting variety, no doubt traceable to the unfortunate breeding results experienced; but I trust this present season may prove an exception, and that we may soon hear of "bonntiful crops" of youngsters. The club is offering for competition during coming show season two gold medals for young Crests and C.-B.'s confined to novices, also several other valuable prizes. Subscriptions are now due, and I shall be pleased to hear from anyone desirous of becoming a member.

Sea Gull's Friendship of Twenty-nine Years.

SIR,—I came across this account of the lifelong friendship of a sea gull in the "Globe," dated June 8th last, and think it will interest your readers. It was sent to the paper by Mr. C. C. Ellmann, of Bognor: In 1875 a Herring Gull came into my possession, from his plumage evidently a young bird, most probably of that year, but possibly of the year before. Instead of the usual three years he took about six to mature the hues of his plumage, eye, bill, and legs. I believe it was a male bird. His weight of 20½oz., and his length 20ins.; both under the average. To prevent his escaping, and so coming to harm, I pinioned him; and he remained in my garden until 1904, vigorous and healthy; and preferring no other shelter from the weather than a lee wall, until a few months before his death, when I brought him under cover at night, so that his last winter was passed without discomfort. His end came with a gradual loss of power and activity, and seemed painless. He proved a most sensible, useful companion, hailing me whenever I appeared, and then remained by me, and trying to express himself to me. And, when dying, he craved and welcomed my company even more than ever before. Were ever man and bird such close, long friends before? I am my own gardener, and he would follow up my spade, or other tool, with unerring rapidity, for worms, wire worms, beetles, earwigs, grubs, woodlice, or snails, etc.; and in the twilights he patrolled the whole place for his morning and evening meals. At certain seasons I caught him a good many birds, and he would swallow a Sparrow, or even a Thrush, whole and head foremost, after well shaking it, returning the feathers and bones in a clean, neat pellet, after digestion was completed. Occasionally he caught them himself, and constantly he robbed the Sparrows of the scraps they flew down with. When not otherwise sufficiently supplied, I fed him at midday with a piece of meat as large as my top finger joint, and a little bread and vegetable or fruit. No one else was ever allowed to do so. A shallow tank supplied his drink, bath, and swim.

Albino British Birds.

SIR,—It may interest readers to know that four weeks ago I had a young white House Sparrow from a friend. This is doing well, and is quite contented. This week I had also a pure white Robin, with pink eyes, but this I am sorry to say, died. Strange to say they were both hatched close to one farm.

JOSEPH BIRCH.

SIR,—It will be interesting to some of your readers to know that I was brought last week a young Robin, pure white in colour, with pink eyes. I tried to hand feed it, but it died next day. I have got the bird stuffed. This is the first pure white Robin I have heard tell of, and I would like to know if you have any record of such an Albino.

W. SIMPSON.

Marking Time.

SIR,—My first visit to a lecture was made on Saturday, June 11th, to the headquarters of one of the Bradford Societies. However, I was a little disappointed. I am not quite posted as to their rules for these occasions, but it was, I supposed, timed for 7.45 p.m. I evidently was a little too previous. I got there at 7.25, but at 7.45 not a soul was in sight in connection with the affair (so I was told). It got to be 8.30, when there was a small gathering of members, who eventually made their way upstairs, with a sort of "shall we make a move" manner. Fortunately, I had some relatives in West Park Road, where I called to "pass an hour away." So I missed the interesting lecture after all, which, I hope, was a success. I was not financially embarrassed in any way, but, inside and out, I think I must have spent what would have put me in the front seats at the Empire, and comfortably witnessed a nice variety entertainment of a pleasing nature. Still, I would like to have heard the lecture indeed.

JOHN H. JOWETT.

New Society for Chopwell & Dis.

SIR,—In reading over CAGE BIRDS for the 4th June, the above heading almost took my breath away. Here we have a man standing up before a meeting of the Derwent Valley C.B.S., giving his word of honour that the same would not be influenced by him. Yet, what do we read in this issue? the said person taking over the secretarial duties! Here is the Derwent Valley C.B.S., in the same place, struggling to keep its head above water, and here are members of the same Society getting another up in opposition to crush the present one. I say, being got up purely for the said purpose. Are these likely to promote the fancy in the Derwent Valley? There seems to me a great doubt if there is any more beautiful place on the earth just now than the Dorwent Valley. I should very much like to see it. But when you find such goings on in the midst of such a beautiful place it almost grieves one to think about it.

Lizard Canary Going Strong in the North.

SIR,—The Lizard Canary certainly seems to be on the up grade, as at the Sunderland Cago Bird Club's First feather table show the quality of the Lizards was splendid. The class had a total of nine entries, this notwithstanding a bad beginning of the season. There are, too, plenty more just leaving the nests, and full sittings of eggs, which augurs well for the future of the Lizard. This variety, with the impetus afforded by the New Lizard Club, ought to be well to the front within a very short time. Novices and others wishing to try a new variety would do well to consider the merits of this beautiful little Canary.

Grubs in the Ear of a Young Thrush.

SIR,—I enclose two maggots which I found in the ear of a young Thrush which I had brought in last night fresh from the nest. They would apparently cause the death of the bird unless found in time. I am a bird fancier, and feel it my duty to send them to you, so that if you think it necessary you could explain it to your readers, and probably prevent loss to some fellow fancier.

F. AUGER.

[We forwarded our correspondent's letter and the two grubs to Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., and he writes:—"The grub (not maggot) you sent me having been found located within the ear of a young Thrush, is not a parasite, but an insect commonly found on foliage. It is one that goes through several transitionary stages. Its presence within the ear then can be well understood, having penetrated there in an immature form. It is doubtful whether this often occurs. Birds do suffer from parasitic invasion of the ear, which sets up very great irritation, and at times death will result; but I question whether this insect could live long in this position. I am keeping it alive, and hope to follow its phases of development, when I will write you further concerning it."]

Mules Bred from a Mule.

SIR—In accordance with the intimation in your last issue of CAGE BIRDS, the young birds which Mr. J. M. Murray states he bred from a cock Linnet-Canary mule and a hen Canary were on view at our Young Bird show on June 11th. The birds excited the curiosity of a large number of fanciers and the general opinion of them was that they were a bit of a puzzle. They were carefully examined by several fanciers who have spent years in the hobby of mule breeding, and although the majority of them declined to give an opinion, two or three stated that they were Linnet mules. Mr. Murray was closely questioned, and stated that he certainly had a Linnet which, however, had not been out of the kitchen for four years, and to get into the breeding room the bird would have to get out of its cage and travel through two intervening rooms before reaching the bird-room, the door of which is always closed. He stated that he had no Linnet in his bird-room, and that his Canaries were all paired up with the exception of this hen (which was in a cage by itself), and the cock mule was flying loose in the room. No matter where he placed the cage containing the hen, the mule followed it, and he eventually let him in to the hen, with, as he states, the above result. The mule was also on view, and is an ordinary dark Linnet-Canary mule, and there was no possible doubt about it being genuine. As Mr. Murray had nothing in his bird-room but his Canaries and this mule, it certainly appeared that the birds were what he stated them to be, viz., three-quarter bred Canaries, for all present admitted that they were either bred from the Linnet or from the mule, as they undoubtedly are not Canaries, although one or two still maintained they were purely Linnet mules, and that Mr. Murray had had a Linnet with the hen some time or other, yet they could not explain away the fact that Mr. Murray has at the present time another nest from the same pair (cock mule and hen Canary), two of which are still alive, and by the time this appears will be a fortnight old, for they admitted that even if he had made a mistake the first time, he would scarcely do so on the second occasion. The difficulty with some of the fanciers present was that the birds did not show sufficient of the Canary blend to be what they were claimed to be, and it is unfortunate that Mr. Murray should have lost the lightest one, which he stated was only lightly marked, the general colour being white. Of the four he had on view one has a pure white cap with several pure white flight feathers in each wing, and this was the bird that puzzled fanciers the most. The other three are similar in plumage to an ordinary dark Linnet mule, although I thought they were a trifle more grey than one expects to find as a rule. I handled all the birds to allow fanciers to examine them properly, and while the covert feathers were undoubtedly purely Linnet, it was generally admitted that the flights were not exactly as one finds in the majority of Linnet mules. No doubt the unusual experience of being asked to give an opinion on birds like these made some of the fanciers hesitate before doing so, and the majority present declined to give an opinion, stating that they did not know what to make of them and although two or three said they were purely Linnet mules, they could not account for Mr. Murray obtaining the second nest. Some fanciers present, however, were inclined to the opinion that the birds were what they were represented to be, so that it is really a matter of opinion. May I ask, Sir, if your Mr. G. E. Weston would care to examine these birds if I could persuade Mr. Murray to send them on to him?

W. REID.

[Our Mr. Weston would be very pleased to see the birds, but both first and second nest youngsters, if possible. Mr. Murray willing, no doubt a time convenient to both parties could be arranged.—EDITOR.]

The Scottish Norwich Plainhead Club's Patronage.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to ask the opinion of the members of the Scottish N.P.C. regarding the policy to be adopted in granting the patronage of the club to shows with a ten miles radius, eight of whose members must be members of the club, which was passed at the annual general meeting on 12th March. The above policy, if adopted, means that only those residing within the ten miles radius will be allowed to compete for club specials. Those of us outside are asked to pay our subscription and look on. In my opinion such a policy is against the constitution of the club, which is carried on for the benefit of the whole of the members, and the popularising of the "chubby one," whose interests we all have at heart.

The Romance of a Minah in India.

SIR,—When I was a little girl I lived for some time on the east coast of India. We had many strange birds in the trees around our house, but we only had one caged pet bird. This was a Minah bird. He was a beautiful bird, about the size of a small Rook, with black, glossy feathers, a bright reddish-gold beak, and a yellow skin ring round his neck. Minah birds are very easy to tame, very easy to teach, and most amusing companions. Our bird could imitate everyone's voice, from my mother to all the black servants, and he has often shrilly called them in imitation of mother when they were taking their afternoon siesta in the heat of the day, and they used to hurry to the house to find what was needed, only to find that it was the Minah and not their "mem-sahib" calling them. His pet trick was to tease the hundreds of Crows which gathered round his cage in the verandah. He used to "caw" to them until they gathered round, and then eat a piece of fruit or other dainty in the middle of his cage while the Crows watched him with gloating eyes. One day he escaped from his cage, and was seen from the windows to be seated on a cactus bush with dozens of Crows longing to pull him to pieces. I feel sure they intended to do so, but had not quite made up their minds how best to begin, when suddenly a huge Kite (a small Vulture) swooped down on "Minah" and carried him off in his claws, soaring higher and higher. By this time we had given alarm to the servants, and a young servant boy who was a "crack" shot ran forward and flung a stone at the Kite (which was about 200 feet high in the air by this time) with such force that the Kite, being hit in the chest, relaxed its hold and dropped the Minah bird, which the boy picked up safe and sound. The Minah was swearing loudly, meanwhile, from fear more than from anything else. He was put back into his cage, and remained very quiet and subdued for twenty-four hours. I hope this story will interest any of your readers who have not been fortunate enough to see other climes, and those who have had Minahs and can appreciate it.

Birds Biting Toes Off Their Young.

SIR,—In answer to Mr. G. Bailey's letter in your issuo of June 4th, I may say that I have had a worse experience this season. I paired a Goldfinch, which I have had six years, to a recently bought yellow Norwich hen. Four eggs were laid, four Mules duly hatched. Great was my horror on looking in the nest when the young were about four or five days old, to find that in every case the hen had bitten off all the toes of her offspring. I, of course, at once put them out of their misery. The Finch I knew was not guilty, as he is a grand parent, never molesting the hen or touching an egg, and always being ready to help to rear the young. He has bred me several dozen Mules, so that I was satisfied on that point. I then determined to try them again, and this time remove the Finch. Four eggs were duly laid, and four Mules "came to town" this past week. I removed the Finch and kept a strict look out on the inhuman mother. All went well for three days, but on the fourth morning, on going in to feed my birds, I was horrified to find this loving? mother's head covered in blood; three out of the four chicks had been treated in exactly the same way as the first lot—not a toe left. The fourth she had just started on and I was fortunate enough to be able to transfer it to a hen which had three Canaries hatched just about the same time. I shall try her once more, just to see if she produces any light Mules, but intend to transfer her eggs (if fertile) to another hen just before they are due to hatch. Perhaps some of your numerous readers of ripe experience could suggest some remedy and much oblige Mr. Bailey and myself.

C. K. EATON.

Eight Eggs in Eight Days.

SIR,—A few of my hens have this season laid as many as six eggs, but never above. However, Mr. Tom Pass, the Lord Nelson Hotel, Leigh, Lancs, has a young hen that has laid eight eggs in eight consecutive days. I have not seen them, but there is not the least doubt about it. I should think this will need some beating for I consider it very unusual. It looks impossible for a Canary (especially the small German, such as she is) to lay so many eggs in as many days. Five of the eggs have proved to be fertile.

JOHN CANNINE.

SIR,—Respecting the letter of Mr. Arthur Downs, about his bird having seven eggs in one week, let me say that I had one hen last year that laid seven eggs in one week, and hatched five young. This year I have one hen that laid eight eggs in one week and hatched five, which I should think is a record number. I breed them in an aviary, 7ft. by 5ft. 6in., out of doors.

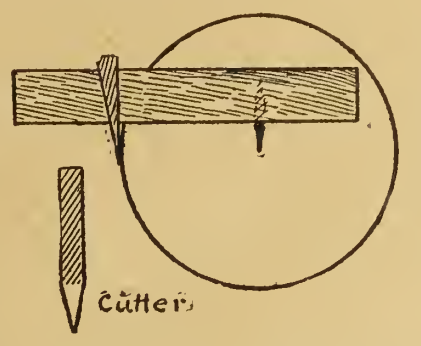
E. PLAYER.

SIR,—Being a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, I see Mr. Downs is wanting to know if any Canary breeder has had seven eggs laid in one week. I have seven youngsters out of seven eggs that were laid in one week, and all of them on the perch, and the hen sitting on four eggs for the third nest this year; and some promising ones too. I won first with a Buff out of the first nest at Choppington, on Saturday. I would like to hear if any fancier has had a nest of seven this year. I have forty-two young ones, all Norwich.

B. CLARK.

SIR,—I am a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, and wish to say that I have a hen that laid seven eggs in seven days. I set her last Thursday on four, and to my surprise on Sunday morning found 7. I may say she has three young ones born on the 9th of April, also three born on 15th May, all doing well. I only hope all these last eggs are fertile, as I feel sure she would bring them up, being such a good feeder. The cock, he is now feeding the three. I should be glad if any reader could inform me if this would injure the hen for another season. This is her second year. I have also two Goldfinch mules, born on the 22nd of April, and three born on the 3rd of June. The hen would only feed them for three days, so I lost them. She is now building again, and I have to-day got four by same Finch from another hen. Is this out of the common?

B. PAYNE.



And Nine Eggs in Nine Days.

SIR,—In going through my paper, CAGE BIRDS, I see that one of your readers has had a hen to lay seven eggs in seven days, and he wants to know if anyone else has had the same experience. Now, three years ago this breeding time I had a Yorkshire hen Canary that laid nine eggs in nine days, and every egg hatched out, but I had not the luck to rear one. I hope your reader, Mr. Downs, will have a bit better luck than me.

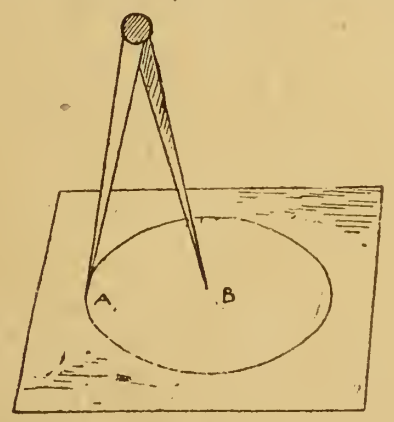
Cutting Out Round Cage Doors.



SIR,—"Novice" should get a piece of wood 5 inches long 1¼ square (yellow pine is best), and then a piece of steel 2 inches long and ⅜ inch wide. File the latter V shape at one end and sharpen both edges of the V. Let it project a little more than half the thickness of the wood he wants to cut, and wedge it fast one inch from the end. Put a 1½-inch fine screw in half the diameter of the door, file it to a point to form a pin, and then let it project ½ inch. Then twist it round a few times from both sides, and the door will drop out.

H. T. CLENNETT.

SIR,—I see "Novice" is asking for a bit to cut out round cage doors. The following is a copy of the tool I always use. A pair of mechanic's compasses. A is to be sharpened something like a knife, and B is to have rather a blunt point. It can be used for any size door. Just "scribe" the circle a few times with A and the door drops out.

H. N. BATES.

Green Food or No Green Food?

SIR,—Does Mr. Bridson think because he has been successful without green food that no one has been equally so by using green stuff? If he does he is greatly mistaken. Take my case. Last season, from one dozen hens and five cocks I finished the season with 119 young, and good class birds they turned out to be. I mention this to show I am not breeding common ones, which are supposed to be "easy to breed." This was at my third attempt at breeding, so I am only a novice yet. I don't think any man used more green stuff than me last year. This is the list and I place first which I consider the best: dandelion, watercress, rape seedlings, shepherd's purse, and red neize. I also gave a lot of celery plants and young lettuce. Plaintain stalks and groundsel I don't much care for, and I used them in very small quantities. When the young have left the nest there is nothing to beat the flowering heads of dandelion, when ripe, and shepherd's purse. Red neize I also found to be much liked by my youngsters. If green food had been the cause of fanciers not getting young, I should have stood a poor chance, as I gave it to my birds in great quantities. What does Mr. Bridson mean by "so-called experts writing?" Does he mean that if fanciers will give up "expert advice," and take his, they might breed some birds? Really, Mr. Bridson, it is very good of you to warn us again these experts, but I for one shall follow their advice, that is as far as using greenstuff is concerned. I don't always agree with experts. One said in CAGE BIRDS the other week that it was very wrong to get your young on milk sop. Why? I contend there are more bone and flesh-forming properties in milk sop than in egg food, and I use a great deal more of milk sop than I do egg food. I have one hen that has just finished bringing up a brood of young, seven in number (not all her own), and she has fed on nothing else. She would hardly look at egg food, and these young look well. My hens have had nothing else but dandelion to feed their young with this season, and I consider it the best of all greenstuffs. Contrary to experts, I am giving it to my young, too. When they have had it in the nest, why shouldn't they have it when they have left the nest? Now let us see what I am doing this season by taking the advice of experts in CAGE BIRDS. I put up 19 hens and six cocks. Owing to the cold weather we had at the beginning of May I lost some young through my hens setting too close. However, I am doing well. I have 30 young on the sticks, all in the pink, 27 in the nest, and over 30 eggs due to hatch in a few days. Not bad, eh, Mr. Bridson, considering I take a lot of expert advice, and use a great deal of dandelion leaves, 18 inches long, so you see I give it them "rank." If you are doing as well without green food, and your birds are in as good a condition (not as I think my birds better than others), your bird-room should indeed be a picture. My birds have been seen by a great many fanciers this season, as I am always pleased to show them to bird lovers and others.

JOHN CANNING.

The Future of the Cage Bird Union.

What is it to be?

SIR,—I had hoped to have dropped out of this correspondence ere now, but cannot do so without one more question to friend MacPartling, viz., whom does he represent—the Newcastle Society or the Executive of the C.B.U.? My previous question being unanswered, I do not intend to carry the matter further, but leave it to your readers to surmise the state of affairs at an executive meeting! To think that the affairs of the whole Cage Bird Fancy are decided by the Secretary and two or three other local men beggars description! As regards Mr. Robson, I regret that he should have read a meaning into my letter which I certainly did not intend; the whole trend of his previous letter was to the effect that with the one hand I was trying to demolish the C.B.U., and with the other to form a Northern Federation. This I emphatically denied, and do so again. Such vague assertions as these—"Was asking someone to stand for secretary," "No one volunteered," "Mr. Brunskill, of Darlington," etc. These sentences following one another make the casual reader think that I was asking one and all, nay, even pressing them, to take the position. I asked one man, Mr. Storey, if in the event of a Federation being formed he would allow his name to stand. The reason I asked him was because he is a sane man, and can see two sides to every question, is no strong partisan, and a man, in my opinion, eminently suited to such a position. I ask Mr. Robson if I did not then and at the Newcastle Committee meeting say that I considered the difficulties in the way too great to form a Federation at present? That being so, how can I be anxious to form it? As for reconstructing the C.B.U., have I not done more towards it by pointing out its faults as they appear to me, than those who have tried to gloss them over and hide them? Yet its supporters cannot, or will not see these faults. Read my letter of February 12th, on which to a large extent the editorial article was based; aye, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it. In it you will see my complaint was not that I was punished, but that I was whilst other greater offenders were passed by, that the Union had become the cause of exhibitors using assumed names, that the business done was not published, etc. As to calling a meeting, I will do so if my society instruct me, not otherwise. I am the servant of the society, not the slave of the Cage Bird Union.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

SIR,—I am glad to see that Mr. MacPartling has dropped the hostile tone which he adopted in his previous letter, and that he recognises that there is no need for personalities. The points raised by Mr. MacPartling in his last letter I fully dealt with in my letter of April 16th, when I remarked on the composition of the Executive Council, and as I fully explained myself in that latter, and gave my reasons why the C.B.U. should be constructed on different lines, I fail to see what more he wants. In any case, as there now appears to be every probability of something being done towards making the Union more popular, these matters will doubtless be dealt with at the first opportunity, and methods adopted to remedy any previous mistakes, and I think it would be better if we were to devote our energies towards gaining this end than to re-open questions that would eventually lead to personalities which would doubtless prove very unpleasant reading to some fanciers concerned in the discussion. In regard to Mr. Johnson's letter, he gives five answers to my question, the first of which needs no comment, as no one has said otherwise. The third difficulty could be easily got over with a little further enquiry, as Mr. Johnson will readily understand. The second and fourth answers are practically one, but herein Mr. Johnson bases his reasons on the supposition that the buyer is an experienced fancier who desires to take an unfair advantage over other exhibitors, although he knows perfectly well that was not my meaning; and it will be clear to all that there is a vast difference between the exhibitor who knowingly buys a stained bird with the intention of taking an unfair advantage over others, and the novice exhibitor who does not know a stained bird when he sees one, and I still contend that it is not right that a novice who shows a stained bird in ignorance should be severely punished, while the man who wilfully imposes on him goes free, and if that man could not be punished according to the rule which is supposed to protect novices, then what is the use of having the rule there? The fifth reason speaks for itself, for it clearly proves that those not in the C.B.U. can do as they like, which is not a satisfactory condition of affairs, to my way of thinking, and, personally, I think that means could be found whereby all fanciers found guilty of dishonourable conduct would be punished, whether members of the C.B.U. or not. The other portions of Mr. Johnson's letter need no comment. They simply prove that he is determined to become distinctly humorous (despite his assertions to the contrary), and whether he will succeed or not depends entirely upon whatever success may attend his efforts to become a real Scotsman. I would like to mention, Sir, that the other night Mr. J. Farrer, the chairman of the Sunderland C.B.A., made a suggestion as to Rule 22, and as all suggestions will no doubt be welcome at the present time, I will place it before your readers. Mr. Farrer's suggestion is that all members of the C.B.U. should be allowed to show where they like, and debar non-members from exhibiting at C.B.U. shows.

W. REID.

SIR,—May I ask for a little space in your valuable paper, to make a few comments on the interesting controversy which has taken place in CAGE BIRDS during the last few weeks, relative to birdy matters in the North of England? Mr. Crawhall, the secretary of the Newcastle Society, apparently believes in making things hum, and certainly members of the society are being provided with plenty of food for reflection. Messrs. Robson and MacPartling seem a bit disappointed in Mr. C. Rather a strange thing, seeing that they were members of a self-appointed body of fanciers who waited upon Mr. C. at the beginning of the current year, and begged of him to take over the secretaryship. The old secretaries, it appears, could not see eye to eye, hence one of them got together a few of his friends, unknown to the other secretary, and approached Mr. C. Would he consent to be secretary? Of course he would. He jumped at the chance. One of his reasons for taking it being he thought he could restore harmony amongst the members. Mr. MacPartling now finds Mr. C. inconsistent. Well, Mr. C., you need not fret over that. He stated at one of the meetings that he had "no confidence" in one of your predecessors. Mr. Robson did not think the old secretaries were up to the work! Now he is misrepresenting Mr. Crawhall! What queer folk we are! By the by, Mr. Crawhall sometimes misrepresents himself. How on earth he could find time to take over the secretaryship of our society, when he had a few weeks before that (reluctantly, he said) advertised all his birds for sale, owing to pressure of business, is more than the majority of fanciers in this district can understand. Jealousy is the cause of all the turmoil and unrest that has crept into our ranks, and so long as the society remains divided into (shall I say) two cliques, sooner or later it will be sure to fall. Has there been any of that brotherly feeling shown towards each other which is expected? Very little. Cold sneers have been more used towards each other. Men have quarrelled over frivolous things. What is the result? We are pretty nearly the laughing stock of the whole Fancy. We left the Union in order to satisfy the demands of some of our members. We issued a circular inviting local societies to consider the idea of forming a "Northern Federation." What have we done since that? Nothing except look forward for Friday to see what the heads of our society had to say about each other in CAGE BIRDS. What have we done towards assisting other smaller societies to whom morally we gave the lead to leave the Union? Nothing, or next to nothing. The members of the society resigned from the C.B.U., acting on the advice of a few men who did not like it. Are things any better now? I think not; and they never will be any better so long as these things are allowed to exist. Our president apparently considers we are a fine set of chaps. Has he graced our meetings with his presence once during the current year? Perhaps Mr. C. or some of the influential fanciers who interviewed him before he was elected president, could explain that away.

MEDWAY C.B.S.

Held in one of the large rooms at the Liberal Club, Rochester, June 8th. The Society intend holding two nest feather shows this season, and the one under notice was the first of these. There was a nice entry, considering that ill-luck has not been unknown to Kentish breeders as to others this season. The quality was good, especially in Norwich, British, and Mules, and the arrangements made by Mr. G. A. Acland (secretary) and his assistant (Mr. W. B. Smith) were excellent. Medal for most points was won by Mr. Acland; special for best Norwich fell to a rattling buff shown by Mr. Brumhill; special for best vhc British was taken by Mr. Acland; and special for best British was annexed by Mr. W. B. Smith with a really good Goldfinch. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged, and his awards gave entire satisfaction. NOR. CL. (Champion): 1, spl, 2, 3, vhc, hc, Brumhill; c, Acland. NOR., A.O.V. BEDFORD.

First feather show held in Park-road Hall on June 11th. Several of the Bedford fanciers have had a disastrous first round, consequently had nothing ready for this show. We hope, however, they will be more successful at the next show, to be held in five weeks' time. There were four classes for Norwich, and several choice specimens were on view. Mr. Breitenfeld (Northampton) made the awards, and gave general satisfaction.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

The first of the season's young bird shows was held at headquarters, the Sydney Arms Hotel, on June 1st, when a goodly number of members put in an appearance, and some nice birds were staged. The popular and genial chairman, Mr. G. Grant, captured the special for best in the show with a promising Crestbred that should do well later on. The indefatigable hon. secretary, Mr. A. S. Treasure, as usual had everything in apple-pie order, and extended a courteous welcome to visitors. Mr. W. H. Kilmister placed the cards.

Country Rambles

Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S.

This society held their annual ramble on May 28th, the destination being the Whalley district. Leaving Rochdale at 8.15 in bad weather, the party went by rail to Whalley via Blackburn, where two of our members, cyclists, had ridden to join in the ramble. The weather was now grand, and Mr. J. Dewhirst, who knows the district well, was leader. The church and churchyard, the old abbey ruins, and the fine avennes of trees with the famous hill which goes by the name of Whalley, were visited, and the songs of the birds added to our enjoyment. Crossing the fields we went nest-hunting in the hedgerows and found a lot of nests, but left them undisturbed. The nests of the Thrush and Blackbird were found in great numbers compared to those of the smaller species. Passing the famous village of Mytton, we kept on the move to Hodder Bridge, where we say the Wagtails, both pied and yellow, in their native haunts on the banks of the river below us. Leaving here for Stonyhurst College, birds were again found to be plentiful, especially Chaffinches, Robins, Blackbirds, Thrushes, etc., with Corncrakes in large number. We did not forget to do justice to our dinner at the Bayley Arms Hotel, after which we turned our foot-on the move to Hodder Bridge, where we saw birds in large numbers and of all kinds, but the larger birds, such as Blackbirds and Thrushes, were in very great evidence, and there were some grand ones amongst them. We then secured a motor char-a-banc, and ran through seven miles of grand country to the village of Wilpshire, where we boarded an electric tram car for Blackburn and there did justice to tea. After viewing Blackburn's fine buildings, we caught a train for home, which was safely reached at 9.45, all having enjoyed the ramble in what may be termed the Switzerland of Lancashire. Hearty thanks were passed to Mr. J. Dewhirst for the able manner in which he had conducted the ramble.—WM. ADAMS, sec.

Dunfermline and District C.B.S.

Under ideal weather conditions the members held their first annual ramble. At the pleasure of Mr. Henry Beveridge (himself a keen naturalist) we enjoyed the privilege of holding an excursion over the grounds of Pitreavie, and to our assistance he sent Mr. W. Hutton, head forester, to act as guide. The party assembled at the New Road, and took car to Walbeath, where a start with the ramble was made. We were not long in getting about our business, and right ably friend McLaren made the first find; he had beforehand made the purchase of some real "Aberdeen County eggs," and was in the act of placing one in a likely spot for us when to his surprise out popped Jenny Wren before his eyes. The little housewife was busy incubating a nest of five eggs. Mr. John Alexander, who in the past has proved himself a friend of the society, was duly informing the party to look out for the eggs of that now extinct bird the Great Auk, as he was making a collection, and would be obliged to the party to keep a diligent search for same, but more about the Auk after. Keeping still to the old waggon road we found quite a host of young birds on the wing. Willie Saden, in case of argument, had brought two books with him; one a little illustrated book on eggs, which was now brought into service in connection with a nest of peculiar tinted Hedge Sparrow eggs. We were now met by Mr. Hutton, the forester, and set out under his supervision to investigate the Fen. We were now taking all before us, and as the order was to whistle when a find was made, it was now a regular blowing all along the line. We were finding quite a lot of pheasant eggs shell-less, and were at a loss to know the cause of this. We had now recorded to us several nests of Blaekbirds, Robins, Chaffinch, Mavis, Hedge Sparrow, Jenny Wren, Willow Wren, Chiff-Chaff, and Corn Bunting, each either with eggs or young birds. The last named variety took us some time to dispute over, and led to the party being called together; but one was among friends. Mr. Goven having strayed from the flock, so the whistling began again before we got him in touch. Advantage was taken of a nice shaded corner to have a rest, while the smokers made a light up, and an inspection of the "whole body" took place. George Coutts had padded all the way from Townhill to gain us, while another addition to the party was made into the appearance of Mr. and Master Allister. Again we made a start, the first nest found being a Yellowhammer, then came Chaffinches, Greenfinches, a Gold Crest Wren, and Wood Pigeon. The members were now getting interested in natural history, and when Geordie Rae doffed his coat and jacket in order to climb a tree to examine the contents of a squirrel's nest, the boyish instinct seemed to have revived; a skeleton was there found which John Alexander swore had been the Great Auk; the forester also drew attention to several young rabbits found dead. He explained their death to be caused by their feeding on poisoned grasses, which took effect on them at this early stage. We had now forged our way back to the old road again, while a naturalist member coolly poached a couple of Yuddocks. We rested at the cross roads and indulged in a good drink of Adam's wine out of a John Lawson tumbler. Again re-invigorated, we left the main road till Wolvertown was reached, thence we directed our steps into the plantation; here the Linnets were holding forth, but we failed to locate the nests. We stood and listened to the Larks, while the lambs take to their mothers' side suggesting it's the straw hats they are frightened at. At tea the president, Mr. John Rankin, in his usual gracious style, begged the company to show their appreciation to Mr. Beveridge for the pleasure granted, and asked Mr. Hutton to accept our best thanks for the great assistance he had given that afternoon. Mr. Hutton suitably replied, after which a short time was given to social intercourse, and before starting for the train all voted that this our first ramble had been the best function held under the auspices of the society. We were handed in two new names as members for the club, and the outcome should lead to a more wide and deeper study in these branches of nature study so deeply loved by birdy men.

Poplar and District C.B.S.

The country ramble took place on June 5th, and turned out even a greater success than last year's. The day was not an over brilliant one as regards the weather, King Sol only showing himself once or twice. Whilst regretting that the number of members who turned up were so few, nine in all, a very enjoyable day was spent. Starting from Chingford station, we broke into that part of the Forest which lies immediately behind the Royal Forest Hotel. After wandering about for some little time, it was found that we were on the verge of the Forest again, and coming out at almost the same spot as we entered, and this sort of thing happened once or twice, until it was decided to appoint a guide, Mr. Spink being elected to "see us through." A terrific shout went up by one of the party, and a general rush was made to the spot, only to find that they had been hoaxed, as all to be seen was a very lean and sparse looking animal, which might have been called a horse at one time. This animal mightily confused us, as wherever we turned we came across him, and we put down the fact of our inability to penetrate further into the forest in the first instance to this animal, which had the happy knack of turning up unexpectedly. However, thanks to the new guide we were able to successfully negotiate the many intricate parts of the Forest, and to come across very many nests of great interest. At one time during the morning the secretary was to be seen mounting a very tall tree, and during his ascent many remarks (sarcastic and otherwise) were passed as to the possibility of his reaching the top, but the nest proved well worth the climb, as he had the good fortune of seeing a wild bird just emerging from the shell in two instances, and the remaining two eggs one mass of very fine cracks, which gave the eggs a very pretty appearance. Having reached the Robin Hood, a very fine spread was laid before us, reflecting very great credit upon the proprietors, everything being done in A1 style. After tea was finished the party adjourned to Messrs. Paul's nursery, and a more gorgeous sight as regards colour in the rhododendrons it would be impossible to see. After leaving this delightful spot, the party made their way towards the station. Altogether a very pleasant day was spent, and so enjoyable was it that it was proposed another ramble should take place shortly, due notice of which will be given in the Press.—H. W. COOK, hon. secretary.

Bristol Cage Bird Society.

The annual ramble was held on May 28th. Through the kind permission of our president, Col. Gibbs, M.P., we paid a visit to Tynesfield. Twenty-seven members and friends availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting this beautiful spot. Arriving there at 3.30 we were met by the Forester (Mr. Ball), and after everyone trying to look smiling to the camera, we were shown over the beautifully kept stables, gardens, and estate generally. Proceeding towards the woods, we found a number of nests, chiefly Blackbirds with young dead, some a day or so old, others partly and fully feathered, which we put down to the cold nights. The guide then took us up through the woods to the summer-house, and on the way a few young birds were seen on the wing. The Cuckoo was seen and heard. Arriving, we viewed a magnificent table about 6ft. across, and cut off a butt of an oak that grew near the house. We then took a north-easterly direction which proved to be the tit-bit of the day; we came to where a fine herd of grand Scotch oxen were grazing; some of the members passed their admiring remarks on same from behind a strong fence. Some young and strong Missel Thrushes then evaded capture, and the party found a beautiful Chaffinch's nest, just built. After taking a wide detour of the Scotch oxen, on the advice of the ladies, we got amongst the gorse, etc. The first find was a Blackbird's with young; then we found Linnet after Linnet with young at various ages, and eggs. We had quite an exciting time. Then we viewed a hen Pheasant sitting, which took no notice as we passed; next a Yellowhammer's nest containing four eggs was found on the ground in the furze. A Hedge Sparrow's nest with one egg was pointed out. Then we had the pleasure of viewing a nest containing four fully fledged Thrushes; it was a picture. During this time birds of various species were seen and heard, and on nearing the home farm and workshops, a Garden Warbler was greeting us with its song, the Chiff Chaff was calling, and the cries of the young Thrushes were heard. Walking through the yards we entered the cattle sheds, and the first things to catch our eye were the prize cards that lined the walls, which told the quality they contained. We then wended our way to the well-known hostlery, "The Battle Axe," Wraxall, where a splendid meat tea was awaiting us. After full justice had been done, Mr. Manley proposed, and Mr. Clarke seconded, a hearty vote of thanks to our guide for the way he had showed us round and explained things of interest. Mr. Buckland then proposed, and Mr. Manley seconded, a vote of thanks to the host and hostess, for the splendid repast provided. Tea over, it was decided to return in the light, so as to see the delightful surroundings, and on the way we had a sight the majority had not seen before, viz., the system arranged for pheasant rearing, the pens at suitable and equal distances apart covering a considerable acreage, under the watchful eye of the keepers day and night. A few spots of rain were falling, but not enough to spoil the pleasure of a well-spent and most interesting afternoon.—Miss BYERLEY, secretary.

Border City (Carlisle) O.S.

The second ramble of the season took place on May 29th, but only a small company assembled at the station, where we took train for Head's Nook. The members present were: Messrs. G. Davidson, A. McDonald, T. J. Robson, J. Robson, T. Holmes, R. Macartney, W. Graham, and J. C. Bell. The day was dull at the start, and on our arrival at Head's Nook the rain came down very heavily, causing us to shelter in the station for almost an hour. While seated here we watched a Starling carrying grub to its nest in the chimney of the station-master's house. The shower over, we set off. Through the village we were particularly struck by the great advance in the foliage and the blooms of the lilac, laburnum, hawthorn broom; and the fruit trees were a pleasure to see. A Robin's nest with two eggs was our first discovery; then followed several Chaffinches', Blackbirds', and Thrushes'. Nearing Allengrove we had to take shelter again from the rain, but the time was passed in birdy chat and "funnosities" by our friend and mothhunter Mae. We next took to a by-lane which led into a wood. A large flock of Woodpigeons flew over our heads, and the call of the Peewit was often heard. Skylarks high up gave forth their melodious song, and the Thrushes sang out against the storm. The diversity of nesting places was frequently remarked on. A Whitethroat with 1 egg was seen high up on the hedge, while another with 5 eggs was found on the ground. A coincidence in the latter was an old nest not a foot away, in all probability the same pair having come back to their old haunt. A Thrush's nest with 3 eggs, and that of a Hedge Accentor, or "Blue Dykey," as it is commonly called here, with 5 young, were noted. The find of the afternoon was the nest of the Willow Wren containing 6 eggs. Circling round we again came to Allengrove, where we sat down to a substantial tea set before us in regal style by Mrs. Barron. We were all ready for it, and did full justice to same. Leaving, we took the road to Allenwood, making for Cairn Woods, but shelter had to be taken again from the rain. The Landrail or Corncrake was heard while we were sheltering, and the Carrion Crow was seen. In Cairn Woods we found an Accentor's nest with 5 young, which were all dead. The Dipper was seen flying along the stream. Nearing the station we saw, and heard singing, the Garden Warbler and the Wood Wren. Waiting for our train homewards, we had a birdy talk with the stationmaster, Mr. Armstrong, who himself is a student of bird life in their natural haunts. We arrived again at Carlisle about eight-thirty, having enjoyed ourselves in spite of the showery afternoon.—"JUST COME BACK."

THE DANGER TO THE BRITISH BIRD FANCY.

A GREAT GATHERING OF BIRD-LOVERS.

The National British Bird and Mule Club Makes a Move.

The open meeting held on June 9 last, at "The Feathers Hotel," Westminster, under the auspices of the National British Bird and Mule Club, to consider the effect of the recent decision of the Appeal Court upon the keeping of British birds, and the steps to be taken to combat the threatened danger to the Hobby, turned out a gratifying success. There was a great gathering of bird-lovers, the large club-room being crowded, and the proceedings were thoroughly business like and to the point, the speeches made being imbued with a proper spirit of determination to resist any attempt at interference with a hobby at once legitimate and elevating, and to secure a fair hearing of the bird-keepers' side of the question when any attempt at further revision of, or addition to, the Wild Bird Protection Acts is made, no matter by whom.

In the end it was decided to endeavour to get the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Society for the Protection of Wild Birds to receive a deputation, with a view to discussing the position from both sides of the question, to ascertain upon what lines (if any) they were moving with regard to future legislation, and to discover whether there was any possibility of an understanding being arrived at that the privileges of bird-keepers should not be encroached upon, and that any system of protection should fairly take into consideration the bird-keeper's side of the matter. Upon a vote being taken, the following fanciers were elected to comprise the deputation: Messrs. G. Crabb, J. Robson, A. Silver, and C. E. Weston, with the hon. treasurer of the N.B.B. and M.C., Mr. T. R. Trower, the hon. solicitor, Mr. P. Nichols, and one of the secretaries, Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr. Mr. Crabb withdrew, however, in favour of Mr. Dawson, so that the bird-trade might be represented. The matter is to be taken in hand at once. The National British Bird and Mule Club deserves every praise for the admirable and prompt way in which it has moved, and the joint secretaries, Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, for the highly creditable manner in which they organised the meeting under notice; British bird-keepers are under an obligation to them.

The chair was taken prompt to time by Mr. J. Robson (chairman of the N.B.B. and M.C.), when there was an exceptionally good attendance, which increased quickly until every available seat was occupied, and many of those present had to be content to stand. The gathering was representative in every way, a great number of noted exhibitors and keepers of British birds attending, whilst most of the London societies, too, supported the meeting.

Letters were read from the Cage Bird Union, offering to assist in whatever way it lay in the power of that body to do, and from Mr. Henry Gray, M.R.C.V.S. (himself a bird-keeper of high repute), deprecating uncalled-for interference with the keeping of British birds, a hobby beloved of the working-classes, and one which he could say, from personal experience, was most certainly not the non-humane pursuit some people tried to make out.

Mr. Trower said that he realised they were undertaking a big thing, and the questions were, how to start, and what to do. He was in favour of forming a Defence League of some kind, or to put some scheme of defence into practical shape. The laws were getting into such a state that it was becoming very difficult to keep birds at all. He could not help thinking that this was brought about in a great measure by the present methods of some catchers and some bird-shop keepers, and there was undoubtedly need for reform in these directions. Transgressing the law they could not defend. But was this the sole cause of the interference? or did these societies want to do away with bird-keeping altogether? If so, it was time bird-keepers combined to protect their interests. The rich had all the sports and pleasures money was able to command. But the poor could not even pursue their favourite hobbies of keeping live-stock without all sorts of restrictions and difficulties being placed in their way. Rabbits, pigeons and fowls had long ago come under the ban of the authorities, and now it seemed as though it was to be the birds. This was hard lines upon working men, who loved to keep and look after something alive, and who could not afford expensive birds, but could get British birds at a reasonable price. He felt sure that where those who wished to put down bird-keeping numbered a thousand, there were to be found a hundred thousand deeply interested in the hobby of keeping birds, and especially British birds. He would like to hear the views of all the catchers and dealers who might be present as to whether a licence would be acceptable to them. He felt he must say that some of them did not keep their birds as they ought to do, nor their shops in a clean, sanitary condition, and he thought that conscientious dealers and the bird fancy generally were being made to suffer for the misdeeds of a few of the dealers and catchers. The law must be complied with, and the close season respected; and if these people were under licence then they could be penalised, and would have to amend their ways or get out of the business altogether. He wondered if it would be possible for a deputation from that meeting to wait upon the R.S.P.C.A. and the S.P.W.B., and ascertain their exact views on the position.

Mr. Cooper remarked that he thought any league which might be formed should include foreign birds, for, in his opinion, the keeping of these birds was quite likely also to be attacked in the near future. He would call it the "Bird-keepers' Protection Society."

Mr. Dennithorne said that he had been a catcher and dealer and interested in birds for upwards of 50 years. In the course of a most interesting and able speech, he combated the idea that catching was necessarily cruel, that catchers were necessarily a set of rough and villainous characters, and that dealers did not take the trouble to look after their birds and shops in a proper manner. He said that there might be exceptions, but pleaded that if these cases were looked into extenuating circumstances could generally be found. The path of life could be a very hard one, and only too frequently was so to those who were what is known as "down in the world." Even in cases which came before the Courts, he contended that bird-catchers got the reverse of justice, and that they were very unfairly dealt with by the police, etc., in the endeavour to secure a prosecution. In his opinion the poor man was entitled to benefit through the wild birds out in the fields; but it was the policy of the rich landowner to grab all to himself, and to keep down those of his fellow men less blessed with this world's goods than himself. He would point out that the bird-shop keeper had to pay his share of the taxes of this Great City, and often a share out of all proportion, comparatively, to his income.

A letter from Mr. P. F. M. Galloway, well-known as a highly-skilled keeper of British birds:—

Sir,—I have read with regret and utter disgust the brutal and, to my mind, unjust decision against Mr. Flowers respecting the Skylarks. I am perfectly willing to subscribe, as far as my pocket will admit, towards the expenses, if there should be any incurred, in getting the amendment and alteration spoken of in your article on the subject in your issue of May 28th (which is much needed), and so be able to get a little justice if there is any for us in this country. I mention this because it seems, and is abominable to think, that even the opportunity for the study of birds in captivity, and the pleasure that is derived from the delightful hobby and interesting pastime in being able to keep various birds in perfect health and condition, should be taken from us, and in exchange—what do we get? Simply a little extra taxation. I cannot, for the life of me, understand how such a law can be in existence in this supposed free country called England. Who on earth do the birds, butterflies, etc., that fly about this country wild belong to? Whose property are they? It appears to me extraordinary that there should ever have been any question raised as to whether a naturalist or lover of bird life should or should not get and keep a bird in cage or aviary.

I have always thought until now that this society called the Wild Birds' Protection Society had for its object the putting down of cruelty to birds in particular, the same as the R.S.P.C.A., and I perfectly agree to putting a stop to cruelty to any dumb animal, whether it be a bird or anything else. For instance, the keeping of ten or a dozen birds in a small cage (and that sometimes filthy) which ought to contain, say, only three or four, is, to my mind, gross cruelty, and should be stopped. Yet it seems now, as the thing stands, that birds can be shot down, but this is not considered cruel. Yet a bird kept in perfect health and song for several years in a proper sized cage and properly attended to, is looked upon as a "shocking thing." But let us hope as the minds of these people broaden out, that they will see the thing in a better light, and will learn that those who keep birds are not inhuman monsters who practice a barbarous pursuit, but are fond of and take a keen interest in the welfare of the birds under their care, and spend a great deal of their time in contributing anything that will add to the comfort and benefit of their feathered pets; and this sometimes at a considerable cost to their pockets.

The keeping of birds in cages and aviaries and seeing them in perfect health, beautiful condition, and tame, has become an accomplished fact. Years ago it was difficult to keep them in fine condition. How is it that we are now able to send birds of all kinds to various exhibitions? and there the public can see them, perfectly happy, very often in full song and in as grand condition, and, in many instances, even better than if they were in their wild state. It is because a great interest is taken in birds and their welfare looked after. Through carefully studying the subject of food, etc., their requirements are thoroughly known to us; even in the case of seed-eating birds their natural wild seeds can be bought in packets, instead of our having to (as in years past) depend upon the ordinary Canary, hemp, and such like seeds. I ask this question: Can any man, woman, or child see the least cruelty in this; if so I should like to know where it comes in. Not only can we keep in perfect health these birds, but in properly constructed breeding cages and aviaries get them even to breed.

I have heard it said that birds are becoming scarce. This is nonsense. There have always been plenty of birds ever since I was a boy, and there always will be, and with the exception of one or two species of birds in this country, the man is not born yet that can make them scarce. This I can prove. I say again, that birds in captivity (I don't mean in match boxes, but properly constructed cages and aviaries, properly fed and looked after) are as well off and sometimes even better off than in their wild state. This is a tall order, is it not? Well, this I will also prove, if proof be required.

I must say without wishing to hurt anyone's feelings that some of the laws are extraordinary, and in some cases appear to me, and no doubt to others, anything but really just. You cannot keep a dog to guard your house against burglars unless you pay 7s. 6d. per annum, but, maybe, even your next door neighbour can have half a dozen cats which are an abominable nuisance to others, and he or she pays nothing; and if your young son steals five pennyworth of coal, he is threatened with 6 or 7 years; and I am not stating, nor have I stated, anything that is not an absolute fact.

All the details of bird breeding explained, while it shows the way out of all difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

THE SENSATION OF THE SEASON.

A Great Book Upon Hybrid Breeding.

The art of breeding exhibition Mules, and producing the rare Hybrids between two British birds, has been one upon which, in the past, it was always extremely difficult to obtain detailed and authentic information, consequently Hybrid breeding has been a pursuit in which many bird-lovers have found it difficult to make headway. But all this has now been altered. With the publication of "Cage Bird Hybrids," the great work written by that leading authority and judge, Mr. C. Honlton, with upwards of 25 years of practical experience at his back, the budding Hybrid breeder is placed upon the same footing as those "old hands" whose success in turning out Clear Mules and rare Hybrids excites the envy of the Fancy. In addition to this feast of knowledge concerning all the finer points and secret methods of the skilled Hybrid breeder "Cage Bird Hybrids" contains sixteen beautiful coloured plates of Mules and Hybrids from the brush of Mr. H. Norman—plates which are perfect masterpieces, and depict the ideal show specimens. The price of each monthly part of this notable work is sixpence only, or, post free, sevenpence. Every reader should carefully peruse the back page this week, and note the wonderful value given for money. Orders should be sent at once to the Publisher, Cage Birds office, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. The demand has been phenomenal, so don't delay. "Cage Bird Hybrids" is the sensation of the season.

Ordered to Kill.

In an article dealing with the early days of Norwichtown, Connecticut, the New York "World" recalls that some 250 years ago the settlers were impelled to move further inland by, strangely enough, the pest of Crows and Blackbirds. Crowds of these birds darkening the sky and filling the air with clamour would swoop down on the fields of newly planted maize, during late May or early June, tear up the young shoots and quickly leave whole fields in ruin. They finally became such a scourge that the laws required each man to destroy certain numbers of Crows, Blackbirds, Jays, and other grain devouring birds each spring. For example, in 1717 the following law was enacted: "Voated: to oblige every person in the town of 16 years of age and upwards to kill one Duson of Blackbirds, or Woodpeckers, or Jay burds, and bring their heads to the Select Man: and what are killed in the month of March, April, or May, shall be counted a duson: and if any person kills more than his Duson he shall be Alowed one penne pr head—and if he doth not kill his duson shall pay to the town Rate one shilling."

THERE ARE TIMES
When breeders of Canaries and Hybrids find it inconvenient to cook and mince up egg for their birds. We can help them, for our
EGBISCO
which is already cooked and sterilized, only requires damping with cold water to make a reliable, efficient and genuine Egg and Biscuit Food, upon which the breeder may rely implicitly. Do not confound it with any other preparation on the market, for it resembles none of them in the least. Sold in 3d., 6d., and 1/- tins, by us, and all Corn and Bird Shops. It has been pronounced by publicly-recognised authorities to be by far the MOST ACCEPTABLE FOOD
of its kind on the market.
One trial makes constant users.

THE KING ANTI-MITE PERCH.

Birdle Men know that all cage birds are attacked at night by Redmite. This is the great trouble with Amateur and Professional breeders alike.

The King Anti-Mite Perch will quickly clear your Cages of Redmite. It is a well finished, hollow perch, with ornamental ends, pierced on the underside with holes, in which the Redmite congregate. Each morning one end of the perch is removed, and the brush or cleaner, shown in illustration, is passed through, effectually clearing the perch of these troublesome little pests.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Meeting held June 18th at headquarters, Mr. G. Barkas in the chair. This meeting being held specially for receiving entries for first feather show, we were pleased to see such a good turn up, and we are making a record entry for the show. There is not much detcrioration in the Fancy here by all appearances, and we think, taking everything into consideration, there are prosperous times ahead for the society. May the members never grow weary in the Fancy.—J. LINDSAY, Hon. Sec.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE & DIS C.B.S

At a special meeting it was finally decided to have the full eight classes for Crests and Crest-breds at our annual show, to be held on Friday and Saturday, November 4th and 5th, and to again guarantee full prize money, £1 (one pound) per class, irrespective of number of entries. We appeal to all Crest fanciers, especially in the North of England, to support our efforts to make this variety more popular, seeing that the Crested Canary seems to be on the decline in the North. We have also fixed up with two popular judges (Messrs. G. E. Russell and J. C. Barnes).—G. HARVER, Sec.

CITY & COUNTY OF PERTH O.S.

Meeting held in the City Cafe, June 20, Mr. D. Brown (president) in the chair. Mr. Forrest intimated he had been successful in his endeavour to secure a trophy for competition among the members and that Sir John A. Dewar had kindly given a splendid solid silver cup to the society. It was unanimously agreed to record the thanks of the society to Sir John, and Mr. Forrest was also thanked for the good work he had done. It was agreed that the cup be called the "Dewar Challenge Cup," and he competed for each year at the open show (a different variety to hold it each year in turn) for the best young bird bred by a member. The Norwich had the luck of the ballot for first year. Messrs. Forrest and McDonald were appointed a committee to draft rules and conditions, and report to next meeting. It was agreed to hold our first feather show on 16th July at 3 o'clock, in City Cafe, and Mr. Carstairs, Perth, was appointed to judge same; special to be given to each variety according to entries; entry 3d. each bird; over four free.—JAMES KERR, Hon. An Interesting Presentation.

At the ordinary meeting, held on June 14th, an interesting interlude was provided by the presentation to the retiring hon. sec., Mr. T. Harrison, and to the assist. sec., Mr. B. Head, of suitable mementos by the members in recognition of their past services. Messrs. Ernest Jones and J. Douglas, in a few well-chosen words, commented on the untiring efforts and long services of both gentlemen on behalf of the Cage Bird Society, and expressed the hope that they might long continue to be associated with, and interested in the future of, the society, which expression was heartily endorsed by all members present. A pretty mahogany clock, suitably engraved, was then handed to Mr. Harrison by Mr. Wilkinson, and a handsome pipe and purse of money to Mr. Head, by Mr. Ernest Jones. Also a special vote of thanks was heartily accorded to Mrs. Harrison, who has at all times assisted Mr. Harrison in his official duties. Mr. Harrison and Mr. Head thanked the members of the society, not only for their kind appreciation, but also for the hearty co-operation and valuable assistance rendered, during their tenure of office, and assured all present of their continued interest for the future prosperity of the society. Allow me, on behalf of the presentation committee, to tender our sincere thanks to the donors who have so generously helped in this matter.—ERNEST JONES.

CLAPHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held at Landor Hotel, June 9th. There was a well attended meeting. The agenda included the election of three new members and the nomination of two other gentlemen for membership. The Young Bird Show is to take place on July 9th. Mr. W. H. Vale was unanimously elected to judge the Canaries, and Mr. S. A. Sandy the British birds. The competition is likely to be a very keen one, as the members report they have had a very successful breeding season, and the birds that will he put on the hench promise to give a good account of themselves this show season. The lecture on the Norwich Canary was then given hy Mr. J. Robson, and proved very instructivo to the Norwich breeders. Every point was brought out in a way that left one and all unanimous that if the advice were followed the fancier would put his foot firmly on the first rung of the ladder. After a few well chosen words hy the chairman, Mr. W. H. Vale, and a vote of thanks from one and all, a very enjoyable evening came to a close.—A. C. ASKEW, Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

Monthly meeting, held at the Market Coffee Tavern, on June 14th, chair occupied by Mr. J. W. Ford, the attendance being one of the largest of the year, several of the "veterans" of the society turning up, which gave great encouragement to the elective officers. The secretary read communications from the different specialists clubs whom he had applied to for patronage; also a very welcome letter from the Mayor of Swansea, who wished the society every prosperity, and enclosed a donation. Two new members were enrolled, Messrs. H. Kostromin and Jas. Steer. The final arrangements of the F.F. Show were then proceeded with, and specials announced by the following members: Three from Mr. W. T. Kirby for the best Nor., Yorks. and Bord. in each section; Mr. D. A. S. Longden, for best Brit.; Mr. Harding Williams, for best Mule; Mr. J. Richards, best uneven marked Bord.; hottle of whisky, per a friend, for best hird in show; shoulder of lamb for 2nd hest hird, by Mr. Yeo. The announcement of these specials was received with great satisfaction by the members, and a vote of thanks was passed to the donors. The next item was a lecture by Mr. W. T. Kirby, on "The Norwich Canary and its Management." The lecturer, on rising, received a splendid reception, and gave a lucid address, being listened to with the utmost attention. Several interesting points were dealt with, and notes of the same were taken by several of the novices present. At the conclusion of the lecture, a large number of interesting questions were asked, which the lecturer answered. A hearty vote of thanks was then given Mr. Kirby for his admirable lecture. This lecture will, the Editor has kindly promised, be fully reported in this issue.—S. H. GEORGE, Hon. Sec.

GLASGOW AND DIS. DERBY O.A.

The half-yearly meeting was held in the Grand National Halls, Main-street, Gorbals, Glasgow, on June 3rd, when the president, Mr. A. Buchanan, presided over a good representation of members. A general discussion of an animated and social nature took place with regard to the improving of the society, in which the following members took part: Messrs. Black, Fulton, McIlwain, McLauchlan, Shaw, Ward, Buchanan, and Bullions; hut nothing definite was arrived at. I am very pleased to chronicle that an increase of membership has taken place, and that everything augurs well for the annual show. The members present reported a fair breeding season, although many complained of the inclement weather during the first round, which was the canse of many clear eggs. Messrs. Fulton, Black, McIlwain, and Ward have done fairly well; others just moderate. But now that the weather has picked up, good results are anticipated. The following gentlemen were selected to place the cards at the show, viz., Messrs. D. Kennedy (Paisley) and D. Caldwell (Baillieston); the former has accepted, and the latter declined. Am in negotiation with the fancier third on the list. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Buchanan, who ably conducted the meeting, terminated the proceedings. Plain prize cards are, I may say, to be used this year in place of the expensive "Moroccos."—E. B. BULLIONS, Sec.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will he given weekly for the hest three anecdotes ahont birds written on postcards. Competitors must he under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

*Thrush Attacks a Cat.

A Dover correspondent chronicles a fight between a Thrush and a cat which ended in the cat slinking off beaten. She had designs on the bird's nest. The mother bird raised a shrill alarm. Mr. Thrush appeared on the scene, and attacked the cat. The latter beat a retreat to a wall where the bird again attacked her with all force of wings and beak. Several times the cat nearly fell from the wall in escaping the attacks at her head, and eventually slunk off.—Sent by Albert Fitzsimmons (age 9½), 31, Lichfield Road, Nottingham.

A Nest of Cauliflowers.

Last month my father was surprised one morning on going round the garden to find a number of young cauliflower plants (which had been picked out in boxes) missing. Thinking perhaps the Sparrowe were eating them, he dusted the plants with soot; but they still continued to go for two or three days just as though they had taken wings. This almost proved to be the case, when later I found a Blackbird's nest on a ledge in the garden wall, the foundation of which was solely of the missed cauliflowers. There are four young ones in the nest now, and every day I take them small pieces of hard-boiled egg, for which they always seem to be ready.—Sent by Hetty Shirley (age 12), 7, Croft House Lane, Utley, Keighley.

*Blue Tits at Home

Just near our home is a lamp-post in which a couple of little Blue Tits have made their nest this year. We often go and watch them, as it is so amusing to see these dear little birds hopping in and out of the top of the lamp. There are 3 young Tits who are so very sweet when they open their gaping mouths ready for their mother to put something inside. The hen is a very brave little mother, for even when the lamp-lighter comes each evening to light up, she does not heed him, and will not quit her nest for an instant. She takes good care no one comes too close to her fledglings to frighten them or harm them in any way. This is a nesting place I found myself at Felixstowe. —Sent by Claro Meyam, age 15 years, The Gables, Felixstowe.

Country Rambles

City of Glasgow S.C.

The members had a ramble on June 18th, their destination being Knightsend, past Whiteinch. The weather was delightful, and a singing contest was held in the open air, at which the singing was much better than is usually obtained at the indoor contests, the singing of the wild birds outside bringing the birds "away." After a most enjoyable afternoon's outing the company adjourned to the Elderslie Rest, where the company under the chairmanship of Mr. S. Pullen, held a concert, the singing and other items being above the average. Another ramble will be held June 25th, meeting place Whiteinch Cross, 3.30 p.m., singing 4 p.m. Result of contest: 1st Pullen, 2nd Moulden, 3rd Rough. Judge, W. Christie; timekeeper, A. Young.—A. MCCALLUM, sec.

Preston O.S.

The annual ramble took place on Sunday, June 19th, when a small but enthusiastic party of fanciers, headed by our worthy chairman, Mr. Dent, left Preston by train for Longridge. Several fanciers were picked up en route, including our veteran member, Mr. P. Waring. With the promise of a hot day, the party proceeded quietly by road and field path through cool shady lanes to Stoneyhurst, where a splendid view of the famous college was obtained, and thence on to Higher Hodder, where a hungry and somewhat over-heated party sat down to a good dinner. After brief rest our pilot led us off in the direction of Lower Hodder, and then on to Hurst Green. Here the Ribble was safely crossed by the ferry, and a halt being called the party had an opportunity of viewing the scenery which at this place is magnificent. But the stern call of "Now, gentlemen, please," from our leader brought us to our feet, and no time was lost in passing through more lovely scenery until the village of Ribchester, famous for its Old Roman antiquity, was reached. After a brief rest and a few sarcastic remarks hurled at the wooden figure adorning the entrance of a somewhat ancient hotel, we again took to the field paths, which eventually led us on to the high road near Ribbleton. Here a tired and now less enthusiastic party took the car which speedily brought us within easy reach of our homes. The birds we observed on our ramble included Linnets, Chaffinches, several Wagtails, a Sandpiper, and many others too numerous to mention.—THOMAS LEEMING.

Kelty and Blairadam C.B.A.

A ramble took place on June 7th in the woods of Blairadam, by kind permission of Sir Charles E. Adams. Glorious weather prevailed. Our party was split into two parts, and we were very soon into business. Our first bird was one of the plentiful pheasants. On searching all the underwood and trees, Tbrushes and Blackbirds were all flown, plenty of young being seen on the wing. We next came across plenty of Wild Pigeons' nests. The wise old Owl was seen. We next came to a more grassy bit, where Willow Wrens' nests and White Throats' were found. When we came to a more marshy spot we found here, Wild Duck, Curlow, Partridges and Larks. At this stage we discovered the much coveted Redstart with six eggs all at the point of hatching. The Chaffinch was always ready to greet us with his "Pink, Pink," his nest being often discovered. We saw the Hedge Accentor a few times in the least likely places. We then saw Mr. Greenfinch with eggs, and saw some others with young. The meadow Pipit was seen chasing a Cuckoo who had been intruding. We also discovered the nests of the Common Wren, Grey Wagtail, Robin, and Dipper (the last-mentioned was seen on the pond in all his glory). The Wheatear and Stonechat were also seen sporting on the dikesides. We were fortunate to see the Woodcock and his mate. Snipe and Lapwings were very prominent. The Corncrake was heard in the fields as we drew nearer home. We saw, too, a few of the Warblers flying from branch to branch. We then made for home, every member feeling tired, having done all he knew to see and hear the rarer of our British birds.—JOHN FORD.

Under the White Rose.

GREAT HORTON O.S. Annual Open First Feather Show on Saturday last proved to be rather a failure; entries came up badly, and the society will have a fairly big deficit on the show. This is a pity, for Great Horton have tried their utmost to keep up the interest in these shows, but after Saturday's result a little studying will have to be done before another venture takes place. The sectional members' show of the Y.C. British Bird and Mule Club gave a much better appearance to the show, and the birds staged were of a high class, the Linnets especially being very smart.

THE very large number of members' shows which were being held on Saturday last, it was thought, had probably a lot to do with the meagre entry, and the promoters beincan the new rule whereby any society can hold a members' show when an open show is in progress. Better luck next time.

Y.C.B.B. and M.C. held a meeting on Saturday evening last, when a few details in regard to patronage were gone into, the principal being the classification required. A nice selection of five classes was formulated as a special recommendation to societies, but any society wishing for this club's patronage and not caring to provide more than four classes, are allowed to amalgamate two of them. Patronage was allocated to four shows, a few more applications being left over, pending investigations being made to avoid clashing. The club, however, has two or three dates open for further application.

SPEN VALLEY C.B.A. held a very successful members' show on Saturday, 60 birds being put down in eight classes, and some real good youngsters amongst them. This district is very strong in the Fancy at present, and the society has very good prospects. Something could easily be done to try and reach those fanciers who are not members; an increase of 25 per cent. in the membership ought to take place before the start of the show season.

GREAT HORTON Good Intent held a members' show, too, last Saturday, Mr. A. Jowett judging the 40 birds staged. One class in particular was a startler, no less than 17 entries in it, and some good birds amongst them. Several other Bradford societies also held shows, and I have heard tell of a few "good 'uns," and birds that when through the moult are going to take some stopping. They say, alas! that the good die young.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

OBITUARY.

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. E. Fox (Long Eaton), that I have to inform you of the death of the wife of Mr. James Bertie, the well-known Nottingham judge and exhibitor of Norwich. It is a sad blow to "Jimmy," more especially as all his children are in Canada. The consolation of every fancier in Nottingham and district is his in his sad bereavement.

Mr. T. OWEN (Thurnscoe).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. F. C. Sims, the secretary of the Barnsley C.B.S., that I have to record the death, at 56 years of age, of one of our oldest and most esteemed brothers in Mr. T. Owen, of Thurnscoe, who lived in Barnsley for many years. When with us he was a keen sportsman. He kept both Yorkshire and Norwich Canaries. I feel sure there are many who have known Mr. Owen in and around Yorkshire, and those who knew him will join us in sending our heartfelt sympathy to those who are left to mourn his loss. (Mr. H. Perry (Thurnscoe) also writes regretting the demise of Mr. T. Owen.—EDITOR.)

When you see gentlemen like Mr. J. E. Davies, N.P.C. cup winner, who everyone admitted had the hottest coloured Norwich living, Mr. Dormer, who had the hottest Cinnamons, Mr. Binns and Mr. W. H. Shackleton, who had the hottest Yorkshires, both big Palace winners, who all use only Royal Red, why ask or bother any more about whose colour feed to use? Sandiford, the Colour King, has sold each of above gentlemen this last week from 50 to 100 lbs. each.—(Advt.)

"Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—is again in the June issue graced by an excellent coloured frontispiece from the brush of Mr. H. Goodchild, who has depicted with his usual fidelity and charm two of the species known as the Black and Yellow Creeper, otherwise called the Banana Quit. An article concerning this Creeper is contributed by Mr. A. Sutcliffe. Other articles are from the pens of Mr. Wesley T. Page and Mr. H. Goodchild, and there are also many notes, book reviews, letters, etc., that will be found interesting, and many illustrations.

The Tunbridge Wells F.S. has been reluctantly compelled to abandon their annual open show this year owing to their inability to obtain on previous occasions a satisfactory "gate" at the Sussex Assembly Rooms (which has in other respects been sufficient to pay expenses). Their endeavour to obtain the Great Hall this season for the show has been unsuccessful. A members' show with enlarged classification and numerous specials, will be held at headquarters and possibly open classes will be added for local non-members. It is hoped the latter will be well patronised in order to assist the association to hold a show next year.—H. G. WHIBLEY, hon. secretary.

The quality of "first-numbers" often decides the fate of new ventures in the journalistic world. If it does so in the case of No. 1 of "The Country-side Monthly," edited by Mr. E. Kay Robinson, and published by Messrs. Horace Marshall and Son, 125, Fleet Street, London, we can confidently predict a happy future for this new-comer. It is the official organ of the British Empire Naturalists' Association, the Schools' Mutual Aid and Flower Fund Society, and the New Collectors' Club, and deals with all sorts of naturalist and zoological subjects, microscopy, geology, astronomy, photography, etc. The issue consists of 42 pages of closely printed articles, notes, etc., and a large number of half-tone illustrations; and is published at fourpence net. An excellent coloured plate of the Young Male Great Spotted Woodpecker accompanies the issue.

We hear that Mr. E. Tams (Longton) is to judge Longton C.B.S. First Feather show of July 2nd.

I am a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS, and find it the most interesting and instructive cage bird journal published, and I have tried all other Fancy journals.—A. HOLLINGSHEAD (Hove)

Mr. Hugh Lammie, proprietor of Darvel Poultry Farm, has been appointed secretary of the Darvel Ornithological Society in my place, and all communications should now be addressed to him at East Main Street, Darvel, writes Mr. J. Robertson, late secretary.

Open Norwich Plainhead Club.

Will all societies desirous of the Open Norwich Plainhead Club's patronage, kindly send in applications stating judges' names, number of classes, and all particulars re prize money, etc., before June 30th?—O. MITCHELL, hon. sec.

Kindly note my change of address to 39, Nasmyth Place, Kelty, from Eldon Place, writes Mr. J. Ford, hon. secretary of the Kelty and Blairadam C.B.A.

Yorkshire Canary Club.

Will secretaries of societies desiring the patronage of the above club please make application (if they have not already done so) on or before July 2nd, when the committee meet for allotment? A special circular [see correspondence columns this week—ED.] is being sent to all novice members of the Yorkshire Union, and the committee hope there will be a liberal response to their appeal.—JOHN GREAVES, hon. secretary.

Two Clear Greenfinch Mules.

I was greatly surprised on receiving my CAGE BIRDS of June 18th to see my Albino Greenfinch depicted on C.B.'s front page (I see you have credited it with belonging to W. Smith, Woodford, instead of to W. Smith, Luton, Beds). I am pleased to inform you that I have been fortunate enough to breed two perfectly clear Mules from him which are, at the time of writing, three weeks old. I wish success to your valuable journal.—W. SMITH (Luton, Beds).

Nest Up the Spout.

There is a pump in the grounds of Mr. Bakiston-Houston (Orangefield, Belfast), in which is built a bird's nest, and the only entrance to the nest is up the spout, writes Mr. Walter Connell (Belfast). On June 12 the nest contained 7 eggs; on paying another visit on the 19th the nest contained 7 young ones, all the eggs having hatched. Anyone using the pump would have smashed up the nest; but I am pleased to say that the caretaker has made that impossible by having the handle fastened down with wire. Seeing that the birds have to go up the spout, I think it wonderful.

The Protection of Birds.

In the House of Commons on June 17 last, Mr. Hardy (Kent, Ashford)) asked the Under-Secretary for the Colonies whether any steps had been taken recently for securing concerted action between this country and the rest of the Empire to afford greater protection to rare species of birds, and to put further impediments upon the sale of the plumage of such birds. Colonel Seeley replied that the Secretary of State had appointed an informal conference composed of representatives of the Colonial Office and the British Museum to consider what steps could be taken.

Another Parrot "Story."

The following Parrot story has just been sent us. A Jack Tar, home from a lengthy absence abroad, brought with him a fine Parrot. There being no cage facilities indoors wherein to keep the bird, Jack's mother suggested it should for the time being be placed out in the yard with the fowls. Into the hen roost it was accordingly put. On going into the garden the next morning to see how the bird was getting along, Jack was horrified to find his treasured pet denuded of every feather, and standing "on guard" over the small aperture through which the fowls came into the run. "Why, Polly, whatever's the matter," feelingly enquired Jack. "The matter," screamed Polly; "I'll show them what's the matter now I've got my coat off!"

SALES! SALES!! SALES!!!

"CAGE BIRDS" STANDS SUPREME.

There is no better advertising medium between fanciers than "CAGE BIRDS."—J. MORRIS (Grantham).

I have sold all the birds I want to sell. I have about half-dozen offers for the same, thanks to "Cage Birds."—H. SCHNEIDER (Winchester).

I thank the numerous applicants for my Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire; they are so great it is impossible to answer them individually. I am much indebted to your valuable paper, "C.B.," in which I advertised the bird.—A. BLAIR (Kippin).

Owing to the large number of orders, and the many repeat orders which I get from advertising in your valuable paper, "Cage Birds," I have to stop advertising for awhile, or else keep customers waiting.—T. SMITH (Southfields).

In answer to my advert. in "Cage Birds" of May 28th, I received 93 replies, and I wish to thank them through the medium of your paper. Unfortunately I had only one pair of birds, so that a few applicants are disappointed.—E. TEMPLE (Southport).

I beg to thank the numerous applicants for the British birds that I advertised in "Cage Birds" of June 4th. They were so many that I could not answer them all. When I have any more birds for sale I shall still use your paper.—F. COOPER (Walsall).

I am glad to tell you my advertisement in your valuable paper, "Cage Birds," found me a customer for my Parrot, "Toby," for ten guineas. I had to leave him on approval with a solicitor in London till he was satisfied he could talk; but he sent me the cheque within a week.—F. DONCASTER (Enfield).

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

The Commoner Diseases of Birds: Their Symptoms and Treatment.

By G. YATES, M.R.C.V.S.

As an appendix to my recent contribution entitled "Medicines for Cage Birds: Their Application and Doses," I shall endeavour to describe in concise and, so far as possible, unconventional terms, the causes, symptoms and diagnosis of the commoner departures from health, affecting the inmates of our cages and aviaries, together with appropriate medicinal treatment. Repetition in similarity of the symptoms of many of the every-day diseases must unavoidably occur, particularly with those affecting the respiratory system, which are not always clearly defined one from the other, except in point of degree; so in this, and the avoidance of technicalities for simple phrases, I must ask my readers to remember that I am endeavouring to make clear to all, including those whose educational advantages may possibly not have been of the highest order, the full interpretation of that which I desire to convey.

Many of the symptoms occurring in the course of these diseases will be readily recognised by owners of birds who at some time or other have been unfortunate enough to have sickness amongst their stock, and by bearing in mind the symptoms here described, and comparing them with those manifested during illness, they will be enabled to apply the medicines prescribed in each and every case.

Unfortunately those diseases occurring in connection with the breathing system of birds, and presenting themselves as common everyday disorders, are often in reality only a part (or local) manifestation of some more serious complaint of an infectious character, and often treated as "every-day disorders," until several deaths have occurred and suspicion is excited. On the other hand, many of these affections remain localised, and arise apart from contagion. Here I shall deal alone with those cases arising from causes other than infectious.

The Diagnosis.

The chief difficulty which besets even the most experienced fancier is to determine before attempting treatment what in reality is the matter with his bird, for although there occur distinct diseases with characters peculiar to themselves, yet there commonly occur cases whose symptoms baffle even the more experienced, so that the amateur encounters much greater difficulty when forced to rely upon his own powers of discrimination unaided. Much, indeed, depends upon the power of observation; this is possessed in a varying degree, and those in whom it is a marked feature are naturalists of the first order. To comprehend and interpret departure from health necessitates an acquaintance with appearances in health, and this I find peculiar to those engaged in the cage bird Fancy, more so than in any other of the different branches of my profession, which I attribute to the altruism existing amongst those who take up birds as a hobby, particularly where commercialism is not the all important item.

The well worn adage that "prevention is better than cure" cannot more forcibly be borne in mind and brought into practice than in its application in regard to the health of birds. And prevention of the spread of disease is also all important. To ensure this, fanciers should, if possible, pay more attention to the isolation or setting apart of sick birds (no matter from what apparent cause). Also of those freshly introduced (bought) by enforcing a period of quarantine. If this latter precaution were more fully attended to, I feel convinced that there would be less loss from avian disease than there exists at the present time. This is well exemplified in the case of well-managed establishments where the large domesticated animals are kept, and where liability to infectious disease is reduced to a minimum. Why, then, might it not be practised more amongst the feathered tribe, which represents a not unimportant industry? Considering the present day value of birds, the annual mortality results in considerable monetary loss.

I shall here, in treating of the commoner diseases affecting the lungs of birds, confine myself to those cases of a sporadic nature (meaning, of course, those arising independently of contagion), the causes of which are varied and numerous, and whose severity depends upon the parts attacked.

Delicate Breathing Organs.

Most fanciers are aware of the peculiar structure of the breathing organs of the bird, their communication with the air sacs of the body and cavities of the bones so that the serious import with which these diseases must be regarded can be easily recognised. Their delicate structure, and the more delicate network of their blood vessels, predispose birds to illness by their ready response to variations in the temperature, and more particularly density or degree of moisture in the atmosphere.

Causes.—Exposure in draughty situations; cold air; impure air if too closely confined; irritant gases or fumes where birds are kept suspended in a too high position, and so subjected to noxious and irritant vapours; keeping a number of birds in too small an area, causing them to over and over again breathe the air exhaled from one another's lungs. Heat and exposure to strong sunlight in hot weather are prolific causes of congestion and apoplexy, particularly if the subject be in an over-fat condition. This, however, is easily remedied by removing the bird to a cool and shady place, heat acting indirectly by oppressing the heart, and so causing a stagnation of blood in the vessels of the lungs; but unless quickly relieved, the subject soon dies. Breathing in particles of dust; smoke; spores of vegetable parasites; also invasion of the windpipe and bronchial tubes by small worms; these are likewise responsible for diseases of the breathing apparatus. I shall, however, dismiss those brought about by the agency of parasites, both vegetable and animal, and confine myself to those of more common occurrence, viz., ordinary colds or catarrh, laryngitis, bronchitis, pneumonia, broncho-pneumonia, congestion of the lungs, and, lastly, asthma.

Common Cold or Catarrh.

In most cases it occurs as an acute attack, generally in the early spring or late autumn. There is noticed an occasional sneezing, accompanied by a double nasal discharge, and a slight watering from the eyes. Preceding the appearance of the discharge there is usually a little feverishness, and the bird seems mopy and dull. Later the discharge loses its thin watery character and becomes thicker, tending to obstruct the breathing. During this time the bird continues to feed, and with suitable treatment the trouble will soon disappear.

Occasionally, however, the catarrh assumes a chronic form, and in this case the discharge is often confined to one side of the head only, and generally arises from disease limited to that one side. In the acute form there is little interference with health when the discharge becomes apparent, and it is seldom that death occurs from this cause; when it does it is generally due to the extension of the inflammation to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Exposure to draughts and moist conditions of the air are the principal causes.

Treatment should be early attempted by supplying warmth and by liberal feeding, with the addition of a little green-food, together with the administration of the following medicine:—

Tincture Camphoræ Co., 3 drops;
Sweet spirits of nitre, 3 drops;
Glycerine, 5 drops.

Give in the drinking water (four tablespoonfuls) fresh night and morning until the symptoms disappear. In cases that are of a chronic nature, attempt at treatment is useless, as it does not materially interfere with the health of the bird.

Laryngitis.

This is a localised trouble: an inflammation of the larynx, popularly known as the "voice box," though this is not the case in birds, for in them the vocal cords are situated in the syrinx which is a modification of the windpipe, situated at the point where the windpipe divides to form the two bronchi, and varying very much in its complexity. Birds subjected to draughts, cold air, etc., are the principal sufferers, particularly where the subject is delicate and predisposed.

The symptoms depend upon the degree of the affection. In mild attacks there will be scarcely any noticeable change, but at other times the symptoms become alarming, owing to the fact that the mucous membrane of the larynx becomes swollen, so that the opening into the windpipe is considerably narrowed, interfering with the proper intake of air, and the bird is seen to breathe heavily, a mucous discharge appearing at the beak, and there is noticed a difficulty in swallowing. A bird so affected should be allowed plenty of air space, avoiding draughts, whilst four drops of glyco-Heroin, obtainable from any chemist, should be given in the drinking water (four tablespoonfuls) fresh twice daily until recovery occurs.

The Marked Bird; Its Uses and Breeding.

By F. ARMSTRONG.

A Lecture delivered before the Halifax Ornithological Society on May 7.

Many fanciers will now say, where can we find a pure green-marked strain which we can rely upon to produce fairly good marked birds with any degree of certainty? My answer is, I doubt if one exists purely green-blooded. If you want to get the marked bird rapidly, then this can only be done with any degree of certainty through the Cinnamon, whose markings are to a much greater extent more fixed and more likely to beget what you require, but with the attendant loss of that depth of colour.

At this particular point many of you may ask, do I believe in pedigree breeding? Most certainly. Pedigree is of vital importance, especially in the Yorkshire; in fact, I think it is waste of time breeding haphazard, and from anything but the most reliable stock of pedigree birds. I am speaking from experience, and can now go back five generations for proof. You must know your stock and also those you purchase; study the points of the latter, and note whether the man off whom you buy birds breeds or buys his winners. Having satisfied yourself on this very important point, see that the new stock possesses superior qualities where yours fail. Size, type and quality are of vital importance. Study your birds year by year, noting the weak and good points. Remember, like begets like. You may be fortunate in purchasing haphazard, but there are, in my opinion, 99 chances to one of your failing. No man can pair another's with any degree of certainty unless he knows it thoroughly.

Again, let me impress upon you that should you be fortunate to breed a good exhibition bird, one that can and will win, stick to it, and do not be tempted with gold to part with it. Remember, that is your model to breed to; always have it before you, and maybe, by judicious mating, it will make you a position in the Fancy. You may use it to compare your young birds before showing. Get out your scale, judge them yourself, giving points as per scale. If the same equal your winner, or thereabouts, then show it. You will find after a time that your judgment is not far out.

The Breeding of Marked Birds.

This is the absorbing topic at present in the mind and in the discussion of all true fanciers. How can I arrive at a certain object? I will endeavour to the best of my ability to give you my own experience, as I feel I shall be better able to give you satisfaction, by adopting this method. I shall first have to deal with the unevenly marked, as the unevenly marked is more or less in embryo. In breeding for uneven-marked birds I pair always as far as possible marked cocks to clear hens (if Cinnamon-marks are aimed at, then pink eyes both sides), and my marked hens to clear cocks, or at least only slightly ticked. I should not attempt pairing two uneven or heavily variegated marked birds of any breed together as I should in all probability get more heavily variegated birds than I cared for.

My first experience in marked breeding was from a Buff ticked Yorkshire Belgian and, a clear yellow hen of good colour, in which from its colour alone the old fancier would trace the Cinnamon blood. Both were typical, though not over-large. Still, she won 3rd in the amateur class at the Crystal Palace, 1905: Result, two uneven marked Buff cocks and one Cinnamon cap-marked yellow hen, all winners. One was my old champion winner of 24 firsts, including the Palace Jubilee Show, and another I sold to a prominent Northern Yorkshire C.C. member. From the former last season I bred three open winners, showing that "like begets like," as he had done it before.

Again, from a yellow-green marked cock and a buff eye-ticked hen last year I bred what I considered was a typical unevenly marked yellow—evenly marked with the exception of a small cap. This was of a rich, deep colour, the tone of which came from the green. I felt I had an ideal specimen of a marked bird and set a great store by it. Unfortunately for me I lost it suddenly about a fortnight before the show season commenced. I felt the loss terribly as I was sure it was the finest specimen I ever bred; it had what I was aiming at, length and leg, as well as colour marking. I have both birds yet, and some of their progeny, and am hoping for another this time.

Building up an Evenly-marked Strain.

I am afraid I shall have to build up my strain of evenly marked more on the lines of supposition and by reference to the Border Fancy, together with my experience in the breeding of unevenly marked birds. You will have to remember there is no royal road to succes, in the Yorkshire variety, at least. You will have to start at the bottom and climb up. If any suggestions I can give you here to-night are of advantage to you, I shall feel gratified.

The markings must all be clearly defined in certain positions only, and as near to evenness as possible. The only method to my mind is to pair only those birds together that have the technical markings clearly defined, and so balancing them until we achieve the object aimed at. How are we to obtain this object? Suppose I had a yellow-marked cock bird with only both wings marked and a buff hen with both eyes marked; and if both happen to be off a good strain, all the better. Pair these together. You might have another pair with both eyes and wing marked, and the other marked on one wing and both sides of tail; then pair these. Avoid as far as possible pairing birds with the same markings. If you get any clears, do not be afraid as you will find them extremely useful in building up your strain. You will be able to pair these to birds almost evenly-marked, and so get nearer the goal aimed at. I am afraid if you desire to fix these markings you will have to adopt inbreeding to a certain extent. There is no other way, of which I am aware, of successfully fixing your strain.

Then comes the question as to what extent to go to in inbreeding. You might take father and daughter, son and mother. I am this season experimenting with half-sister and half-brother; that is, both have the same father, but different mothers. You must be careful to see that both are in excellent condition and very vigorous.

Once the markings become fixed, I should discard inbreeding as much as possible. If two or three fanciers were to set about it with this object in view, inbreeding to some extent would be somewhat avoided. I prefer, from my own experience, markings as far as possible on the cock side.

Note: With reference to the experiment I am trying, referred to above, with half-brother and half-sister of different hens, the cock is a clear yellow possessing plenty of length and the hen is about the same size with only one eye mark. I now notice with regard to the young in the nest (although they are only about 10 days old) that one is marked on both wings. How the others will be marked I cannot say at present as I refrain from handling them as much as possible. I think this will give some idea of my method of working and the success I have achieved.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I am afraid I have somewhat bored you with perhaps too much detail, but I sincerely trust you will pardon me. Perhaps I may have differed to some extent from some of the older members present in matters of detail, but in the main facts I feel certain we shall agree. If I have been the means of assisting any of you in any way, I shall feel my efforts have not been in vain.

The Norwich Canary and Its Management.

A Lecture delivered by Mr. W. T. Kirby on June 14th before the Swansea Cage Bird Association.

Having been asked by our Secretary to give a lecture to your members, I have much pleasure in giving you a few helpful hints on the management of the Norwich Canary, this being the bird I breed myself.

The First Thing.

The first thing you must do is to get a room or aviary that has, if possible, a southern aspect. This room must be well ventilated, but, on the other hand, it must be free from all draughts, which are one of the deadliest enemies to the birds. It should also be kept scrupulously clean, as also must the cages and its accessories. Fix your cages on one side of the room, so that they may obtain the full light, but at the same time you must not let the sun's rays strike direct on them, but shield them from it by a blind, for the sun will not only spoil the birds' plumage, but may eventually kill them.

The cages I use are the three-compartment ones, for I find they are the best when breeding; I always run one cock with two hens.

The time to start breeding is a matter that you must use your own judgment about. I find the middle of March is quite soon enough for us in Swansea. We are so situated as to be sheltered from the cold easterly winds that prevail about this time of the year. When you have got your cages thoroughly overhauled and arranged, you must number them off 1, 2 and 3; then select your cock bird, and place him in No. 2 compartment, taking great care to "overhaul" him, too, and see what are his weak points. Then select your hens, and mind they do not have the same weak points as the cock, and place them in No. 1 and No. 3 compartments. Place a wire slide on the side of the compartment where the cock is, and on the other side a wooden slide, so that he can only see one hen. After leaving the wire slide between the two for a few days you will find them becoming very friendly with each other, and you will find the cock feeding the hen between the wire partition. This is the time for you to draw the wire partition away, so as to let the two birds be together.

During this time you must give them both a little egg food, say, twice a week, then place your nest pan with some nesting material in the cage for the hen to build with; and after a few days of play you will find the hen starting to make her nest.

When the hen starts to lay I always take the first three eggs away from her and give her dummy ones, and place her eggs in a box partly filled with bran. I then return the eggs on the evening on which she has laid her third egg. I then shut off the cock from her with a wooden slide, and after they have had a few days of extra good living, I remove the wooden slide of No. 3 compartment and place a wire one in its place, repeating the same process as for No. 1. When she has put No. 3 to nest, I bring back the cock to No. 2 compartment, so that he may be ready when the hen in No. 1 has hatched the eggs, to help bring up the young.

Treatment of Sitting Hens.

When the hens are sitting I feed them on plain Canary seed only. I always test my eggs on the sixth or seventh day, but I should advise the novices present not to do this until they have gained a little experience in the handling of the eggs. You can easily tell if an egg is fertile by holding it up to the light; those eggs that are fertile will appear to you dark, and those that are unfertile will be clear or light. During the time the hen is sitting I always give her the bath, and by doing so I help to keep the thin skin that is around the inside of the eggs moistened, for that will help the chick that may be inside to free itself when the time comes. On the thirteenth day I give a little egg food to the hen, so that she may start to feed the young when they are hatched.

For the first three days after the young are hatched I give them the yolk only of a hard boiled egg, and a piece of home-made bread of the same size; this I grind up, mixing in it a little castor sugar; these I then mix well together. Afterwards I feed them with the white and yolk of the egg, and place half a slice of bread cut from a four-pound loaf about three-eighths of an inch thick; this I grind well together, and add a teaspoonful of castor sugar and maw seed. Lastly, I add one teaspoonful of cod-liver oil, and by doing this I find I need not add water to the egg food; and it also keeps the food nice and moist for the hen to eat. I also give the hen plain canary seed with hemp and German rape in separate vessels. The hemp I give without crushing it, for it keeps the hen off the nest a little longer, and enables the young to have fresh air.

With regard to green food, I abstain from giving it to the young for the first three days, but afterwards I give it to the hen to feed them with up to the time they leave her. Watercress or lettuce I find is the best for the purpose.

A Successful System.

It is now I find the three-compartment cage very useful. When the young birds are a week old I let the cock (which during this time has been in the middle compartment) back with the hen to help to feed the young birds and bring them up. I have worked on this system for a number of years, and have found it very successful, for when the cock has brought up the young to three weeks old, I have but to take the nest of young away, fix the pan in the centre compartment, and give the hen new nesting material to start her building again. When the young are ready to leave the nest I place the wire slide between them, leaving the cock and hen together, for they will feed the young through the wires. I still continue to give the young egg food, and when they are able to feed themselves I give them, in addition, a little crushed hemp and German rape, with a little Canary seed I now stop all green food to the young, and as they get older I reduce the strength of the egg-food by adding more bread to it, until they are eight weeks old. By that time I have weaned them off the crushed seed and egg food, and have got them on to hard seed.

I always keep a keen eye on the young birds during this time, and if I notice them looking a bit thick I stop the egg and seed food to give them bread and milk, with a little maw seed sprinkled on it. I also give the bird two drops of castor oil for one day only. When the young birds appear all right I always give them the bread and milk once a week, for it helps to keep away inflammation.

Concerning Colour-feeding.

The next item (I must only just touch upon it as the time is getting late) is colour-feeding. I make my colour food as follows: For every pound of sweet pepper I add one ounce of hot pepper. I mix them well together, passing all through a fine sieve. Then I get my hard-boiled egg and a piece of home-made bread about twice the size of the egg and give it the same treatment as in the making of ordinary egg food; then I add one teaspoonful of cod-liver oil with a pinch of salt. This should make a breakfast-cup-full. I then add one teaspoonful of the pepper and mix well together, giving each bird one teaspoonful. As they get used to the feed I gradually increase the amount of pepper until I have given them four teaspoonfuls to every breakfast-cup of egg food. I always make my colour food the previous night, as that gives the pepper time to get through the egg food by the morning, when I give it to the birds. I also give them a little hemp twice a week, for it helps to get them into good condition. Also I give them sulphate of iron the size of a pea twice a week in their water; this hardens the colour, and is also a good tonic for them. One thing you must have in your birds if you want to have a good colour is green blood; without this you must fail in your colour feeding.

The Discussion.

This concluded the lecture, and the following questions were asked by the members and answered by the lecturer:—

Mr. H. Jenkins: Do you soak your rape for the young birds?—Ans.: No; I never soak the seed, the reason being that the young birds generally scatter the seed about, and if they were to pick up the same after it has turned sour it would cause inflammation.

Mr. Longden: If the lecturer found young birds going soft, would not soaked rape be beneficial to them?—No; I would put them on bread and milk, with a pinch of maw seed in preference to anything else.

Mr. Ford: When do you stop giving green food?—I never give green food to the young after they leave their parents.

The Stock Book.

Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register." By G. E. Weston.

Post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird breeding easy." This book no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird room, and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

A "BEASTLY PARSON."

The Rev. Rosslyn Bruce and His Host of Pets Interviewed.

The Rev. Rosslyn Bruce, rector of Clifton, near Nottingham, will need no introduction to many of our readers. He has lectured before, and takes an interest in the welfare of the Nottingham and Notts. Ornithological Society, and is, too, a vice-president of the City and Suburban (London) A.C.B., the members of which have also had the pleasure of listening to one of his racy addresses on birds and bird pets. As a lover of birds and animals this reverend and esteemed gentleman will be hard to equal; in fact, after reading the appended interview with him (abridged from the "Daily Chronicle") we think readers will concede him to be "the limit" (if we may be pardoned that expressive Americanism). Would we had more like him.

The Rev. Rosslyn Bruce calmly explained to me (writes the "Daily Chronicle" representative), that he is "a beastly parson." That is his terse way of indicating that he loves all beasts, great and small, and that he has made pets of all of them, from elephants to white mice.

His study in which I awaited him was filled with the song of birds, and through the window I could see on the broad lawn a number of coops, with stables and kennels beyond. Then he bustled in, and was about to explain how it was that I had not been met by a lion or bear at the front door, when a gruff voice called out "I'm very cross."

Doves as District Visitors.

"That's my Parrot," he said. "I've been away in London for a few days, and he's always very cross at my absence. In fact, they all miss me, for we're quite a happy family. This is rather a bad time of year to see my menagerie at its best. In the summer time a typical crowd is"—and he referred to a diary—"a dozen monkeys and lemurs, 53 rabbits, a tame hare, four foxes, 47 dogs of different varieties, 13 ferrets, a number of hawks, some pigs, and occasionally a bear and a wolf. Doves I am very fond of, and I have bred hundreds. All the children in the village have got one to pet. I must show you 'Purity,' my favourite."

But "Purity" was not to be found. Whenever a child is ill in the village this Dove goes to the sick bed to cheer the little invalid with his tricks, and he was now on one of his errands of mercy. But his pupil, "Peace," was fetched—for he teaches his tricks to his fellows—and "Peace" duly sat on Mr. Bruce's finger, raised and fluttered his wings at the word of command, and did his best to deputise for his teacher.

To Hounds on a Bull.

Mr. Bruce does not strive to train his pets to do circus tricks—he is careful to point out that he is a naturalist, and not a showman—but as we walked round the rectory grounds, admiring cages with inmates of brilliant plumage, he told of some of their accomplishments.

There was a young Bull, for instance, which he trained to the saddle, and actually rode to hounds. But the horses objected—did you ever know a horse with a sense of humour?—and the experiment had to drop.

Pigs are great favourites—the Rev. Bruce submits meekly to being called a pig specialist—and at many a church bazaar he has dressed young ones in baby's clothes, presented them with feeding-bottles, and sold them as pets.

On the way to the stables we met Mrs. Bruce wheeling Master Bruce, aged a few months. "He's going to be a 'beastly' boy, too," remarked his proud father. "You see, he's started already"—for the budding beast-fancier was sucking the hind-legs of a rubber horse. Already the other pets have accepted the new comer as one of themselves, and it is pretty to see the delight of Master Bruce when the Doves and Pigeons wheel overhead and alight on his perambulator to be fed.

At the stables there was much to see, and many wet noses to caress, for the animals were welcoming Mr. Bruce home again. The Shetland pony volunteered the sugar-in-master's-pocket trick—which he really thinks is his own invention—and the dogs raced round in a delirium of delight.

Helping Others.

Mr. Bruce is practical in his hobby. He keeps a fine strain of prize fowls, and lets the cottagers have eggs on easy terms for sitting purposes, so that the breed in time will be improved for miles around.

The old-time sport of Hawking is one in which Mr. Bruce is very interested, and he is taking a prominent part in its revival. Rather to the dismay of relatives, he has named his son "Merlin," to mark his interest in the famous hunting birds.

When he was living at Scarborough, some years ago, as usual, he had a number of queer pets, and it became the recognised thing for children to be brought to see them. At last he determined to form a Zoo. Premises were taken, and the show included a pony, 33 inches high, opossums, monkeys, lizards, Parrots—a wonderful variety of birds and beasts. Sixpence was charged for admission, and at the end of three months £90 was handed over to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mr. Longden: If a hen leaves off feeding its young at eleven or twelve days' old, would not a little soaked rape entice the hen to start again?—It may do that, but if you stop the maw seed in the egg food when you notice the ben a little forward, she would undoubtedly go on feeding her young.

Mr. Hocking: Why do you use cod liver oil in your egg food?—I regard the oil as a good food and a very suitable one to mix with the egg food; it also forces the young birds on, and if you want size you must get it when they are young.

Mr. George: Do you believe in double buffing and double yellowing?—I do not believe in double yellowing at all, but I do believe in double buffing. Last year I double-buffed with a clear hen and a heavily variegated cock, and out of this nest I had a bird that has taken several firsts; I may mention that it is full of green blood.

Mr. Longden: What would you do to increase size in the Norwich?—I should use a Crest-bred cock, and should be very careful to look after the young birds, so as not to go inbreeding with them.

Mr. Heal: Will not biscuit do as well as bread in the making of the egg food?—Yes, biscuit will answer the same purpose, but I think it is more expensive than the home-made bread.

Mr. W. J. Jenkins: What do you think is the cause of diarrhœa in young birds?—It is often caused by a chill, which stops the digestion of the food, and causes the food to decompose in the bird's system.

Mr. Phil Jenkins: Do you think that cod-liver oil has got a tendency to bring out a harsh colour?—No; I do not think so; I have had them come out better in colour and level by using cod liver oil.

Mr. Mugford: If you have a bird on bread and milk diet during colour feeding, do you stop the colour feed?—Yes; I miss the colour feed; birds will take no harm for a few days, providing you have plenty of natural colour in them.

This brought a very pleasant and instructive evening to a close, and a vote of thanks was given to the lecturer, who replied that he was only too pleased to do anything for the good of the Society, and hoped the few remarks he had made may have proved useful to some of the younger members.

Wild Bird Life.

A Builder of Many Houses.

The nesting habits of the common Wren are somewhat different to that of other birds. A pair will build several nests which are apparently never intended for the reception of the eggs. Several theories have been advanced in explanation of this curious habit. Some say they are built as roosting places for the cock bird, and are so by many termed "cocks nests"; but against this theory is the fact that two or three may be found in quite a small area, which would not all be required as sleeping places, one being sufficient for the purpose. Another theory is that the birds easily desert the home, and if only a finger be put into it, it is quite sufficient to cause desertion. But this theory I have proved to be incorrect in at least one case. Two nests were found under the roof of an old shed, both beautifully finished. The entrance of each was somewhat disturbed, yet, in spite of this, eggs were laid in one of them, and the young hatched and reared. It is said upon good authority that although a pair of Wrens will construct several nests, they only actually finish internally the one destined to contain the eggs and young. One does not like to pull to pieces every nest one finds during the season to see if this is really the case, but many birds add a few feathers or scrap of hair after the first egg is laid; and so in this way, if in no other, the one nest of the Wren may be finished off better than the others. The home of the Wren is a charming little structure, globular in shape, with a small hole in the front for entrance. The hen bird is the architect, and after the locality in which it is to be placed is selected, she may be seen for quite a fortnight collecting and carrying suitable materials. The safety of this little home evidently depends mainly upon mimicry; therefore the external materials vary considerably in character. If built in the woods against an old moss-grown stump (which is frequently the case), moss and dead leaves will be liberally used. If under the eaves of a hay rick, the hay will be so skilfully incorporated that only the round entrance hole will be exposed to view. The young ones return nightly to the old home to roost, and there is no prettier sight in ornithology than a brood of these tiny feathered creatures, collecting at sundown, and clinging with graceful ease to the surroundings of the artistic homes.

Humming Birds One Penny Each.

In an address delivered by Mr. J. Buckland recently, this gentleman stated that a vast number of feathers used in the millinery trade of England were brought into the country by means of false declarations. All detailed advertisements of the fancy feather sales and all reports of the sales were suppressed by the brokers, and in the heart of London a questionable business was now established. Although the Humming-bird was protected by law throughout Great Britain's possessions in the West Indies, three plume sales had taken place in London this year, when the skins of over 25,000 Humming-birds were catalogued. The prices realised varied from 1d. to 1½d. per skin. The traffic in plumes was nothing less than a national disgrace.

In every copy of "Cage Birds" published from now till July 23rd next, we shall print a triangular coupon. This coupon (see below) is provided with a panel upon each side, each panel must be filled in with the name and address in full of a new reader of the paper. One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each conpon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

For each coupon so sent in with three halfpence in stamps we will send free copies of "Cage Birds" to each of those whose names and addresses appear thereon. Each of these free copies will contain a coupon which in its turn will be available for competition purposes if sent to us properly filled in with three further names and addresses.

RULES.

It must be borne in mind by competitors that:
(1) Each coupon must be legibly and correctly filled up (pencil will do) with the full names and addresses of three new readers of "Cage Birds." (Either actual or possible new readers.)
(2) The prizes will go to the competitors who send in the largest number of properly filled in coupons.
(3) The competition will close finally on Wednesday, July 27th, and no coupons received after first post on that date will be allowed to count in the competition.
(4) The Editor's decision on any point in dispute will be final.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons, which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1s. for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrango with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 577

The First Coupon appeared in our Issue of May 28th last.

Mr. John A. Reece, the well-known cage-maker, of Colston St. Yard, Bristol, sends for our perusal a batch of testimonials which testify to the great satisfaction his cages give to his customers, the low prices charged and good workmanship being specially commented upon.

I did not know there was such a paper as CAGE BIRDS until this spring, when a friend made me a present of a pair of Canaries. Never having had any experience with them before, I have found CAGE BIRDS invaluable and highly interesting. I tell my friends what a help it has been to me. I have four very nice young strong birds so far, so have not much cause to complain, this being my first attempt. I have also a copy of this year's CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL. —WILLIAM L. CLARK (Derby).

"Spillers' Cage-bird Food Requisites" are, we learn, meeting with a tremendous demand from bird-keepers, and it is evident that this has been earned by the high quality and suitability of the goods offered by the proprietors, that widely-renowned firm, Messrs. Spillers and Baker, Ltd., of Cardiff, for many eulogistic letters have been received concerning their specialities. That the latter are thoroughly modern, and calculated to appeal to the up-to-date fancier, a perusal of the firm's price-list at once makes clear, as the different kinds of birds are properly catered for according to their particular needs. Thus we find listed Spillers' Canary, Finch, Linnet, Roller Canary, Foreign birds and Wild Seed Mixtures (a fine selection, this), in addition to mixed bird seed, Parrot, Thrush, Magpie, Lark, Dove, Egg and Biscuit and Cod Liver Oil Foods, while grit, tasteless pepper, lung tonic, nest-bags, etc., are also dealt with together with every kind of seed (maw, rape, niger, etc.). Messrs. Spillers' and Baker's prices are very favourable, indeed, considering the guaranteed quality of the goods.

THE CRESTED CANARY CLUB. PATRONAGE.

The under-mentioned societies have applied for the support of the Crested Canary Club during the ensuing show season: *Border City, October 26 and 27; Bournemouth, November 16 and 17; City of Birmingham, November 30 and December 1; Cheltenham, November 2 and 3; Clapham, October 12 and 13; Gateshead, December 9 and 10; Great National (Palace), February, 1911; London C.B.A., November 25 to 28; *Newcastle, October 21 and 22; Norwich October 6 and 7; Nottingham, November 12 and 14; and Plymouth, October 19 and 20. The societies marked thus: * have not definitely decided. May I ask the secretaries of all societies that intend applying, and have not already done so, to do so at once? By so doing I shall be enabled to take the decision of the committee of the C.C.C. as to which shows are to receive support. There will be only 9 shows at which C.C.C. support will be given, consequently the Crest section at such shows must prove a great feature, and one that will make its influence felt in the gate receipts. The advantages of securing the C.C.C. support are: Cash specials in profusion; artistic diplomas; electro silver teapots; electro silver cake baskets; sterling silver medals; sterling silver cups; sterling silver challenge bowls; and last but not least, for a nominal insurance fee, show committees can insure themselves against loss on the Crest section. Are not these sufficient inducements?—J. S. CLARKE, Hon. Sec., Sunny side, Prospect Road, Woodford, Essex.

CANARY QUERIES.

Egg Substitute for Rollers.

East Yorks.—Your experience of the hen leaving the egg substitute in favour of egg food is quite a usual one. It is possible for a food other than egg to rear young just as successfully, and many of the substitutes on the market are frequently used. But it is impossible to draw distinctions here. You would find a good brand of puppy cakes (without meat), scalded until soft, pressed nearly dry, a sprinkling of maw seed added, and the whole stirred to a crumbly consistency, as good as any substitute you could get. As regards your query about what constitutes a Seifert Roller, your idea seems to be very mixed. Literally, on the face of it, it should at least be a bird of the same strain, or bred by the originator, one Herr Seifert, but as that fancier was long since gathered to his fathers, and, I believe, his strain of birds dispersed, that is obviously out of the question. To-day the name is more of a trade term than anything else, though a so-called Seifert Roller should possess a more varied repertoire than a bird which is trained to sing nothing but a few of the choicest rolls. The name has nothing at all to do with the colour. There are all kinds of variegation and marking in all strains of Roller and Hartz Canaries. The young birds you have I should say would most properly be described simply as Rollers, but if well trained to sing the varied song of a good Seifert cock, then you might properly describe them as Seifert Rollers.

No Success.

J. W.—I do not care for your method of making the egg food, and suspect this has something to do with your trouble hy overstimulating the birds. Sponge cake, as you doubtless are aware, contain a large proportion of egg in itself, so to use it wholly for making egg food is to make the food much too rich for regular use, as when rearing young. Try what success the following method will bring you in this round. As soon as the hens have laid their complement of eggs, remove the cocks, and take them, if possible, to another room out of sight and hearing of the hens. Leave the latter to hatch and rear the young by themselves. As soon as incubation has commenced, give a staple diet of canary seed only. Two or three times a week give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape. A very small piece of groundsel or chickweed may be given twice a week if weather is very warm, and a bath hung on cage for a few minutes daily in hot weather towards the close of incubation period. When young are hatched give a little egg and sponge cake in equal parts for one day, not longer; after this use equal parts egg, sponge cake, and stale bread crumbs. Give it in small quantities, fresh at least twice a day; three times would be better. If the hens do not appear to feed well, add a sprinkling of maw to the egg food. Give a bath with a little common salt dissolved in it each day for three or four days, and add as much sulphate of soda to the drinking water as will cover a sixpence for one-half of the day, for a few days. Give this water last thing at night and replace with fresh pure water at midday. When young are three days old, begin to give a little crisp young chickweed or lettuce fresh twice a day. At eight or ten days old add a supply of cracked hemp. Do not add moisture to the egg food other than what is naturally in the egg. Limit the dietary all through to this regime.

Young Dying.

A. S. T.—In the first place, have a post-mortem on the next that dies in order to discover whether there is infectious disease, which may not be unlikely. Meantime, keep all cages and perches scrupulously clean and don't mix up appliances. Keep the cage in which the birds have died as isolated as possible in this respect. There are a few points in your treatment which are not correct. You do not say whether it was last year or this year that you used soaked rape in the egg food. If this year, it should be obvious to you that this should be dropped, also the cuttlefish, neither of which should be used in the egg food as a practice. I do not care for ground oyster shell either for small birds. Pairing young to old, and buying cocks and hens from different sources, would not cause your trouble. Cover the cage floor with clean gritty sand, and you may give pieces of cuttlefish stuck in the wires. Feed on plain canary seed only as staple. Give a small quantity of bread and milk with a little cod liver oil emulsion on it, and dusted with soft sugar (allowing a small teaspoonful and two drops of oil per bird) daily for a week, and afterwards twice a week, without oil. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape per bird, and twice a week the same quantity of hemp. Give only plantain stalks or seedy chickweed in limited quantities as green food three or four times a week. In the drinking water give as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence each day, from morning until midday, for three or four days, and afterwards add twenty drops of chemical food to the drinking water daily for a week.

Old and Young.

R. R.—(1) It is not unlikely the Roller is getting beyond the bloom of youth, and in that case it is very doubtful whether the head feathers will ever be reproduced. To give it the best possible change of producing them at the moulting season feed on a mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape as staple. Twice a week give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, and dust it lightly with a mixture of two parts flowers of sulphur, and one part chlorate of potash, and finally sprinkle with maw seed. On two other days give a pinch of a mixture of two parts each hemp, inga, millet, and teazle, and one part each black rape, maw, gold of pleasure, and linseed. Give a good spray of green food, in variety, daily. Allow frequent baths. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand, and see there are no insect pests in it. Paint the hare place twice a week for a month with a mixture of equal parts tincture of perchloride of iron and glycerine, and the following day smear it with warm olive oil. Give a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice in the water every second day for one week. Given this treatment it is just probable the bird may come through the moult all right. (2) Yes, hens do now and again maltreat young as you suggest. But in your case I rather think the cause was that the hen failed to keep the nest clean, with the result that the young one was "glued" to the bottom of nest by a dropping as it dried. It takes very little of this sort of thing to cause serious injury to the delicate frame of a young canary. The substance inside the large egg was the egg substance in the process of drying up. The egg would not have hatched.

Hoarseness in Roller.

L.H.D.—Although you say the bird is not, and has not been, in a draught, and is in an even temperature, I am inclined to think if you examine carefully into these points when winter comes again you will find room for improvement. These points are most essential, and treatment is practically useless until they are properly attended to. In addition to being quite certain there are no draughts or serious fluctuations, do not hang the cage high up near the ceiling, nor near or over a burning light in the evening. Feed on a staple of two parts canary to one part summer rape. Once each week give a small piece of bread and milk with three or four drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar, and on one other day each week give half a teaspoonful of the seed mixture advised to "R.R." If available, give a mealworm a day for a week now and again. Give a small spray of chickweed, or plantain stalk daily. In the drinking water give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day for a week, and repeat it about once a month afterwards for a time. Get a chemist to make you up one ounce of mixture composed of two parts each glycerine and liquid extract of liquorice, and one part each oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine; add to the ounce ten grains of potassium iodide. When the hoarseness becomes apparent give fifteen drops of this mixture in the water every second day for a week, then miss a week, and repeat if necessary in this way until hoarseness and wheeziness are quite cured.

Brevities.

To use Quassia (Wet).—Place a heaped teaspoonful of chips, smashed up finely, into a pint jug in the evening; fill jug with boiling water, stir until chips are well saturated, then cover jug and allow it to stand until required for the bath next day. Pour off the clear liquid into the baths. Prepare fresh each time required.

Deformed Beak (W. E. C.).—You will not be able to do any good for the bird in question, and if it is still living it would be the kindest thing to mercifully terminate its existence. I quite expect, however, that it has gone over to the great majority by this time, and thus relieved you of the necessity for carrying out this unpleasant suggestion.

A Long Moult (No Nom-de-plume, Liverpool).—I cannot tell you why your bird has been moulting so long without some knowledge as to how it is kept and fed. If you are quite sure it is not troubled with insect pests you should make yourself equally certain it is quite free from draughts and rapid fluctuations of heat and cold. Feed the same as advised to "R. R." for a fortnight, then give the bread and milk with nothing but a little soft sugar sprinkled over it, and omit the linseed and inga from the seed mixture, and continue with the resulting change until the proper moulting season is over. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice daily for three days, and afterwards four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day for a week.

Deformed Third Toe (H. E. B. R.).—This should have been attended to as soon as the bird left the nest, or as soon as it happened. If of very long standing you will not be able to make any improvement, so do not pester the bird with treatment in that case. If of recent date, give moderate-sized perches. Cut an eighth-of-an inch off the end of a rubber tube as used on a baby's feeding bottle; then catch the bird and, holding the third toe back against the leg, pass the three front toes through the small ring thus provided, and pass the ring upwards until near the end of the hind toe. Leave it there, and when bird is released it will hold the toe well backward. Let it remain on a month, then remove it, and at the same time give the bird perches only slightly thicker than an ordinary lead pencil. If you find the toe grips these perches, even if only now and again, leave them to complete the cure, which may be in a few months. If, however, the toe comes forward and obstinately refuses to remain behind, you may as well give it up as a bad job.

Two Queries (No Nom-de-plume).—(1) Yes; birds bred in May and June this year will be quite reliable breeders, so far as age is concerned, for next season, and should be quite ready for mating at the end of next March or beginning of April. (2) Gold of pleasure is a rich, oily, and highly stimulating seed. As a food it is not suitable for regular use in large quantity. Its proper use is as an occasional tit-bit or refresher. As a medicine it is useful as a pick-me-up and appetiser when birds are in low condition.

Sitting and Not Laying ("Should like some little ones.")—A very commendable desire, which doubtless we all echo, even those who have some already. The hen will not lay this season now, so if she is still sitting, by all means get a clutch of fertile eggs for her to hatch and rear. It is quite probable she will perform these offices efficiently. Get either common hardy Canaries' eggs or a clutch of Linnet or Greenfinch eggs for her. To prepare her for their reception, give her one or two dummy eggs in the evening, and the next evening add two more, and let her sit on these until you have the real eggs ready to replace them.

Hens Failing in Second Round (W. H.).—Probably your treatment during the second period of incubation was at fault. It would be interesting to know how they were fed and managed during that time. It might be a little advantage to use a little soft moss for the second round of nests, even when it is not used in the first nests on account of the increased heat of the weather, but the advantage must be exceedingly slight, even if it exists. Certainly remove the cocks as soon as the hens have begun to sit, leaving the hens to hatch and rear the young by themselves. In all other respects adopt the same line of treatment as that advised to "J.W."

Loss of Voice (Buxtonian).—The trouble is of too long standing to give any prospect of really curing it. It has probably arisen through exposure to draughts, or extremes of heat and cold. These causes must be well looked into, and totally avoided in future. Feed on a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as staple. Twice a week give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it and sprinkled with soft sugar. Give a little chickweed daily. Mix as much chlorate of potash as will cover a shilling in a teaspoonful of honey; make into a soft paste with fine biscuit powder, and give a piece the size of a pea on the end of its perch three times a week, and on the alternate days give twenty drops of whisky and six each of tincture of lobelia and oxymel of squills in the drinking water. Continue this for a fortnight, then miss a week, and give it again in the same way for another fortnight. It is doubtful if the bird will in any event resume singing now until it has moulted.

From Success to Failure (W. E. L.).—You omit one important particular, which prevents my saying with any confidence what was the cause, viz., whether or not you went back to a plain diet after the hen began to sit on the second and third clutches. If not, you ought to have done so. I also note that you began giving hemp on the third day with the first brood, which was at least a week too soon, and might have overdone the hen a little for the later broods. Upon the face of it, I should say the young died through not being fed, but in view of excellent behaviour of the hen with the first brood, if she has been fed properly during the incubation periods since, I should advise you to look well into the freshness and quality of your foods and seeds, particularly egg and green food, before condemning her. Do not let her go to nest again this season. Give a saline aperient for a day or two; feed plain, give a variety of green food; allow good space for exercise, and free bathing, and thus give her a good moult and get into hard condition for next season.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Maggots and Pepper and Enamel.

Rob Roy.—If by "maggots," you mean gentles, then these are good to give Redstarts. I prefer an extra dark green enamel for the wires and insides of the show cage of both Greenfinch and Yellowhammer; in fact, I like it for any seedeaters. Many exhibitors, however, use a light blue for the Greenfinch, and a fairly dark blue for Yellowhammer; in my opinion the birds do not look so "rich" when in front of these shades of colour. As regards the sweet pepper, if you stirred a small teaspoonful amongst the daily soft-food supply of the Redstart, that would be ample; commence with a pinch only, or the strange colour may make the bird shy of its food. It is not often that a Yellowhammer refuses to eat a little of a good insectile food; the pepper can be given in this. Or if the bird's canary seed is cracked (by a seed mill) a little sweet pepper can be mixed amongst it. The pepper should be somewhat oily, then it will adhere well. This latter method applies also to the Greenfinch. Many Greenfinches will eat a little soft food, too; a habit sometimes acquired through mailing with them. You can easily tell by the bird's excreta whether it is taking sufficient colour food; it will be deeply tinged.

A Failure at Hybrids.

Jones.—You are not the only one who will fail to breed Hybrids this season—not by a long way, I expect. But I am sorry to have to say that your methods are entirely wrong, and must handicap you. How you came to adopt them I am at a loss to understand; not through reading CAGE BIRDS, anyway. Plain canary seed I should look upon as a kind of workhouse diet for a cock Linnet and hen Bullfinch; certainly not calculated to make them feel like breeding. Cotton-wool is no good as a nesting material; dry hay, cut into about two-inch lengths, would be far more likely material, or cocoanut fibre (say part of a cheap door-mat) cut up similarly. What do you mean by nest "basket?"—wicker, wood, or earthenware. I should strongly advise you to read "Cage Bird Hybrids," now being published in monthly parts. And did you not see the many articles upon Hybrid breeding published in our columns during the spring months? They would put you on the right road.

Cutting Talkers' Tongues.

W. H. Sprankling.—The man who cuts any bird's tongue with the idea of aiding it to talk, ought to be compelled to have his own tongue slit; in any case he deserves to be reported to, and prosecuted by, the R.S.P.C.A. Really, I thought this horribly cruel notion had been given its death-blow; it has been condemned; and the fallacy of the idea exposed scores of times in CAGE BIRDS, and many, many times in even the outside Press; yet here are you, undoubtedly well-read and educated, asking how a Magpie's tongue should be cut. It makes one almost despair of ever scotching this cruelty. Yet the simple facts remain that birds do not use their tongues when talking, the organ of voice being situated down in the throat, and that there are to-day numbers of clever talking birds—Magpie, Jays, Starlings, etc.—whose mimicry owes nothing to artificial aid of any kind over and above the mere repetition of words, whistles, and so on, to them. You surely cannot have read the article in our last Birthday Number anent Mr. Ferrar's remarkable talking Starling. Any way, I trust you will now use your best endeavours to prevent anybody giving effect to such an old woman's tale as the one that "Magpies have to have their tongues cut before they can talk"—a senseless atrocity.

A Bunting Puzzle.

Dik, Dik.—(1) If the class heading reads "Lark, or smaller," then the Snowbunting would be entitled to compete in that class. My first impression was that a Lark would be called larger than a Snowbunting. But on looking the matter up, I find that authorities differ as to the measurement (average, I suppose) of the Skylark, some giving seven inches and some 7½ inches, while that of the Snowbunting is set down as seven inches. I hope I shall never have to solve the problem, though I favour the smaller than a Lark class as being the correct one. It is a very difficult matter, for some Larks and some Snowbuntings are very much bigger than others of their kind—especially a Buntmg "fattened up" in captivity. (2) The chief colours are white, reddish-orange and black; varying according to the season. (3) It is a seedeater, mainly living on canary seed, like all the familiar Buntings. (4) Yes, both Corn and Yellow Buntings are seedeaters.

Muling Matters.

Goldfinch.—On one point I think you are labouring under a misimpression, for it is quite possible to have good eggs from a Goldfinch and Canary, although the Finch may never have been seen paying the hen any attention. I have a hen (paired to a last year's Greypate) now rearing Mules, yet I never saw this Goldie take the slightest notice of her, beyond "chivvying" her about in apparent disgust. Some of my Goldies, however, feed the hens both before and after they go to nest, and give other unmistakable signs of being happily married. Again, a Finch frequently does not sing so much or so vigorously after being mated up; cock Canaries act in the same manner, too. Thus the eggs of your hen may quite possibly prove fertile. Anyway, I should not change her mate at this late stage; if you take another nest you might do so. Your methods and feeding, seem good enough, but give egg-food daily, and use Osborne biscuits. You should get the "Nutshell" booklet on the Goldfinch, which gives full directions as to the correct foods.

Rearing and Feeding Jays.

F. J. Whibley.—You will pardon me, I am sure, for pointing out that I have dealt fully with the above matters in quite recent issues. Briefly, when hand-rearing, if you mix finely-minced hard-boiled egg with an equal quantity of very stale bread crumb and moisten it with new milk when feeding, you should get along all right. If you get several young ones, however, you will find it cheaper to use scalded and mashed-up puppy biscuits (of best quality), with which you can mix the egg in the proportion of three parts biscuit to one of egg. You can give the youngster mealworms, and smallish garden worms, cut into suitable pieces, should also certainly be supplied. Also you can frequently chop up a piece of lean mutton or beef (mince it up finely) and give amongst the food; or a little tender cooked meat can be given. Personally, however, I fight shy of meat as much as possible (especially so for very young birds). I prefer boiled or stewed rabbit flesh to all other, when obtainable. Mix a good big pinch of fine grit amongst the food now and again, or about half a teaspoonful of powdered cuttlefish bone. You can give the birds a drink of plain water after each meal, if you like. If any nestling should get a touch of diarrhœa (which is unlikely if you give the cuttlefish or grit), well mix a saltspoonful of prepared chalk powder (from any good chemist) amongst a portion of the food fed to it. Repeat after an interval, if it seems necessary. Keep the bird very clean. When adult, a very simple and economical method of feeding is to utilise table scraps largely. As a stock food, you could use broken-up dog biscuits, or puppy cakes, or "Melox" (or other dog meal). Soak with hot water, giving it crumbly moist, and mixing with it table scraps, cooked meat, potatoes, greens, gravy, etc. Give a few trapped mice, young and old Sparrows, and the like (if you can capture them), but not over much raw meat. You will find them accommodating in the matter of food. Eggs (raw and cooked), nuts (cracked), of various kinds, also berries and fruit. Beetles are other things they will eat. Jays I always find very partial to ripe fruit, and it is excellent for them.

Brevities.

Another Song Thrush (M.F.P.).—Get one ounce of tincture of henzoin from a chemist, and stir 8 to 10 drops into three tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give fresh twice daily, and use a glass or earthenware drinking vessel only (not tin). Continue for at least 7 to 10 days.

A Finch Mixture (A.M.C.). — For the small Finches an excellent mixture would be:—Canary and teazle two pints each, hemp one pint, summer rape, charlock, and linseed half-pint each. Pity you did not state what species of birds you have in the aviary. Wild-seed mixture would be relished; and no doubt a little safflower and white sunflower seeds now and again, crackling them if necessary.

Rare Feathered Magpie (Constant Reader).—I have on one or two occasions mentioned the fact that I myself possess a pink-eyed Magpie (a 1909 bird). It is very tame, running about the garden, and talks very plainly. Whether a pink-eyed Magpie has ever been caught in the county of Durham, I am not able to say. It is difficult to put a value upon any bird without knowing its condition. The pocket of the purchaser has a lot to do with it, too, in many cases. For instance, I have known £5 paid for a white Thrush, and I have known such a bird to be sold for ten shillings.

Three Matters (S.T.).—1. You must take away the nest. After 5 or 6 days put in another nest-box and supply of nesting material. You could let this hen sit on her own eggs, I feel sure. 2. The Twite is not exactly a common breeding bird in England, but nests in the Midlands and the North. 3. Crushed hemp, canary and summer rape seeds freely, with maw, teazle, coarse oatmeal, and a little crushed sunflower; also ripe seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse—no other green food, though seeding groundsel tops are good. Gradually stop crushing the seed.

A White Hen Goldfinch (Mrs. B. B.).—It is a pity the mouse mauled your white hen Goldie. Mice must be kept out of cages at any cost; they are certainly dangerous, and have often been known to attack young birds in the nests. You can now only leave the cure to Nature, but no doubt a good tonic would help the Goldie to pull round. Get one ounce of syrup hypophosp. co., from a good chemist, and stir 4 to 6 drops into a fluid ounce of drinking water. Give fresh twice daily, and in a glass or earthenware vessel only. I have a white hen myself, which is breeding.

A Hen Mule (Spivinix).—I do not know that it makes any difference whether you give canary eggs to a hen Mule to hatch, or the eggs of some small British Finch, except that the former are perhaps a shade the more likely to get young successfully reared out of them. You would give egg-food in either case, and the seed mixture you mention would answer well, but one teaspoonful of hemp daily might not be sufficient towards the later stages if the hen had a big brood—some hens use a deal more seed than others when feeding young. It is always best to give the hemp lightly cracked; it facilitates the feeding process.

Not Singing (T. Marshall).—It is hardly possible for me to help you. In effect you say: "My Thrush and Blackbird do not sing; can you give me any advice as to the cause?" If I saw the birds I might be able to do so; but from your letter I cannot possibly. You do not even say whether they are apparently in good health, whether they show any (and what) signs of ill-health (or trouble of any kind), nor how you feed them. If you will give me these essential particulars, I will gladly try to help.

Thrush With Bare Chest (F.S.H.).—It is not worth while trying any remedy, for the moult is now close at hand, when the plumage will be renewed. But you want to make certain that the bird and its cage are quite free from insect pests (red mite), and you also want to improve on the feeding methods that you mention. Get the "Nutshell" booklet, entitled "The Thrush and Blackbird" (2½d. post free), which will give you full and valuable information about the proper management of the bird.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Seedeaters for Exhibition.

Dik-Dik.—Such require to be in perfect feather and steady to catch the judge's eye. The following have all been successful at London shows, and are very suitable for the purpose, always bearing in mind that other things being equal a rare species will win over a common one. Fluches: Gouldian, Painted, Crimson, Green Singing, Pectoral, Yellow-rumped, Fire, and any of the Serins. Grassfinches: Long-tailed, Rufous-tailed, Masked, and White-eared, White Java, and Diamond Sparrows. Mannikins: White-headed, Bronze-winged, Tri-colour and Black-headed. Waxbills: Orange-cheeked, Sydney, St. Helena, Violet-eared, Blue-breasted, and Gold-breasted. Common (Tiger Finches), and Green Avadavats, and Cordon Bleus. Also any of the Cardinals, Weavers and Whydahs, stand quite a respectable chance in their respective classes, remembering that not only must their condition be perfect, but they must be properly staged to show them off to best advantage.

Breeding Indian Green Parakeets.

J.H.H.—It is almost impossible for me to give you a helpful reply, for you give me no details as regards the second lot of eggs, neither do you describe the conditions under which you are keeping them, nesting receptacles, etc. I can only say that undoubtedly your birds will ultimately settle down to nesting in orthodox form, and that young will be reared, even though this happy consummation be delayed till next season. There is ample time for them yet to have another clutch this season; at least, I know of one brood being reared, which were hatched in January! If any young are hatched out supply greenfood and ripe fruit ad lib.—also plain biscuits and soaked crusts of stale household bread, in addition to their usual seed mixture. If you supply the details asked for I shall be pleased to try and help you further.

Grey Parrot Unwell.

E.W.B.—Your bird is not in any immediate danger, but the trouble must be dealt with at once or it may become so. I have known cases in which it has been necessary to put in a surgical stitch, but this may not be necessary in your case—any modern vet. should be capable of dealing with the case, and would probably undertake charge of it while a cure was being effected. Diet: Seed mixture: Three parts each canary and white millet seeds, one part each hemp, oats, paddy rice, dari, and sunflower seeds, well mix the whole together. Also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit (this can be moistened with water), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), the dry potato may also be given; do not stint it for water; let it satisfy its thirst three or four times daily. For a week or ten days try about one tablespoonful of boiled maize daily (this only keeps fresh one day), and spot over same (after drawing away all moisture) eight to ten drops of Dinneford's Magnesia; the magnesia must be stopped at once if the voidings become at all watery. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food whatever. Cases of prolapses are not at all uncommon with Parrots, and are not dangerous, if taken in time by a competent vet.

A Feather Puller.

F. W. W.—It is the "Old, old story," milk sops, etc., followed by feather pulling and eating. Give Dinneford's magnesia, one part to three parts of water, as often as the state of its bowels will permit; at other times well colour the drinking water with Parrish's chemical food. Keep the bird where it will get plenty of fresh air, but do not subject it to draught. Spray it twice a week with quassia solution, and paint any bare places with Spratt's Pennacura. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food whatever. Confine its dietary to seed mixture, boiled maize (as little of this as possible, and as soon as it is eating heartily of the seed mixture, gradually wean it from the boiled maize altogether), ripe fruit, cuttlebone, nuts, and plain biscuit. As it is a young bird, you will probably break the bird of this annoying habit if you follow the prescribed diet and other treatment. If it craves for something to take the place of the sop, moisten a piece of plain biscuit in the chemical food water. As the effects of improper feeding wear away, the skin irritation will gradually disappear, and I hope the feather pulling cease. Give it a piece of a branch, and cotton reels, and the like, to chew up and play with.

Brevity.

Treating a Grey Parrot (F. Chatelain).—The objectionable habit is best checked by covering the grating of cage tray with a piece of half-inch mesh wire netting, promptly removing from the netting any of the voidings which cling to same. Feed the bird on the seed mixture given in our reply to "E.W.B." in this issue; also give daily ripe fruit, plain biscuit (this can be moistened, not saturated, with water), nuts (shelled walnuts are best); keep a piece of cuttlefish hanging in the cage, and let it have a few sips of water three or four times daily. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food whatever. Keep the netting on grating for two or three months, when there should be no further trouble with the bird.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

A. C. Askew.—The two birds I examined for you died of enteric inflammation produced by ptomaines or poisons, or even irritants, which are introduced in the food. The two food samples you send me were fairly good, but the hemp seed might be better. Discontinue the latter, or change sample. The trouble is most certainly in your dieting. For green food give a little watercress, if procurable, in preference to other green stuff. Give a little Lysol, say 3 drops, in drinking water daily for 4 days, and follow on with 5 drops infusion Gentian Co. night and morning in drinking water. Your feeding utensils might also be washed or rinsed out in a solution of Lysol (weak) at each time of feeding.

J.C.—Your letter I received last Sunday, and Canary on Monday, the latter beyond all recognition, unfortunately, in an advanced stage of decomposition, so that it rendered examination quite impossible. If you should lose another I will examine and report upon it in place of the former. The box you used for packing was a very weak affair. Had you used a strong cardboard box the bird would have kept alright, for at the same time as yours I received another from Scotland having died same day as yours. This was perfectly fresh, having been well packed.

J. B. Creighton.—Your bird died as the result of the rupture of an egg-producing peritonitis. The whole body was filled with the contents. This morning I discovered a dead Sparrow in my garden which on autopsy showed a similar condition, with the addition also of a soft-shelled egg, which was of a size much greater than the ordinary. It is interesting to note that birds other than those in captivity suffer from this trouble, and as a wild bird would have abundance of lime salts at its command, it would somewhat upset the theory that the trouble is brought about by a deficiency of these salts. It is possibly more often due to too rapid egg formation, the process being too fast to allow of adequate deposition of these salts in the elaboration of the shell. The giving of calcium in the form of finely ground oyster shell, greatly ameliorates the trouble by supplying an excess of same at the period of egg formation. With poultry this answers exceedingly well, and I have used it amongst my own with the best of results. The difficulty of expelling the egg is said by some to be due to weakness of inertia, but it is more probably due to the collapsible nature of the egg.

Acanthis Barbarus.—The cock Siberian Goldfinch you sent me proved a very interesting case indeed, and showed the presence of disease of several weeks' standing. This will doubtless surprise you, as you state it had been cheerful and apparently well until of quite recent date. The reason for this I will explain. The disease affected the lungs, which, when these are the seat of the disease, produces in most birds rapid death, but as it would seem with Bullfinches and Goldfinches, there is a pneumonia of quite a different character, which is slow in its onset and assumes a more chronic form. In such cases only a small area of the lung tissue is attacked, and it has not such a tendency to spread as in the more commonly acute forms, but sets up a centre of disease which does not extend very much. Owing to the fact that only a small part of the lung tissue is consolidated and put out of action, it necessarily follows that the interference with respiration is scarcely noticed. On the other hand, in those cases of ordinary acute pneumonia, when the greater part of one or both lungs is affected, breathing rapidly becomes distressed. In the bird you sent me the apex of each lung was quite solid, more of the consistence of liver than lung tissue, and there were signs of necrosis (local death) of these diseased areas, and as the difficulty in breathing is proportionate to the extent of the diseased process, you will be able to understand the nature of the case. Variations in the temperature and moisture of the air greatly influence the health of a bird so affected, so that death usually arises from these adverse influences acting harmfully on the system of a bird so affected. Some cases run a very chronic course. Mr. G. E. Weston has had some experience of this disease, which he rightly describes as peculiar to these birds and hybrids, and states that at times birds so affected appear almost well, but at the onset of cold or damp weather the symptoms manifest themselves by difficulty in breathing, etc. To me the disease is almost new. I have only met with three cases since Mr. Weston brought it before my notice, so am not prepared to speak of its cause in a very confident manner, but I look upon it as a disease brought about by the agency of a parasite, either of vegetable (fungoid) or animal origin, the former due to the introduction into the small bronchial tubes of spores of fungi, with which the seed may be contaminated, or by small filaria or worms, the irritation produced by which setting up a local inflammation. Relief in such cases may be afforded by giving to birds so affected 3 grains of carbonate of ammonia, 5 of tincture of squills, and about 10 drops of glycerine or simple syrup, administered night and morning in the drinking water. I look upon this treatment as palliative only, much depending upon the season of the year; if at beginning of summer it is very possible that by so allaying the irritation the disease may pass off. During treatment, should there be any variations in the atmosphere, such as moisture, cold easterly winds, there will be a recurrence of the symptoms. Seed given should be quite fresh, and free from mould or dust, and should not be stored in a damp place where moulds might form. No; it is not infectious; where one or more birds are attacked, it would arise in each case from the same cause. One might argue that all birds fed on same seed should become similarly affected; this is not so, however, some possessing a greater power of resistance than others. A similar disease is met with in sheep, of very common occurrence, and possessing similar post mortem characters, which has been found due to the presence of filaria or small thread worms in the smaller bronchial tubes, causing what is known in them as verminous bronchitis, which later attack the lung tissue. Should you encounter a similar case amongst your birds, try a course of the medicine as prescribed above. There was an absence of fat in the body; the breast was almost fleshless. The swollen condition of the body showing the gizzard as enlarged was really due to emaciation and wasting within the body, so that it would collapse and the gizzard appear unduly enlarged; this organ was in all respects healthy.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

An Address (S.W.T.).—We cannot give correspondents' addresses without their permission, but if you will send your letter in a stamped, sealed envelope, we will have it forwarded on at once to the right quarter.

Springs in the Seed Hopper (H. Suffell).—We may be wrong, but we really cannot see how this contrivance could act satisfactorily.

Price and Place (C.E.B.).—We believe 50/- to 60/-. Write to Mr. Rochl, 400, Edgware Road, London, W., for particulars.

Lost Homing Pigeon (O. W. Porter).—We have sent your postcard to the "Racing Pigeon." This paper will publish the bird's marks, and may put you in touch with the owner.

Bought Off a Cart (R.E.P.).—We hardly think it would be fair to publish your communication, as it might only serve to prejudice any honest people (we presume there may be a few) doing business in the same fashion, and we feel sure you would not wish this to happen.

A Photo (W. Connell).—We are sorry to say that the photograph is not sharp (clear) enough to permit of its being satisfactorily reproduced.

A Fanciers' Reminiscences (J. Vickers).—We shall hope to find a corner for your interesting little contribution, and thank you for sending it to us.

A Photo (Millar and Eadie).—Thanks for an excellent photograph, which shall be reproduced in due course.

Lysol (Myra).—Lysol is one of the most powerful proprietary disinfectants and germicides known; it would aid the healing process by ensuring the parts being in a perfectly aseptic condition. One per cent. (that is, one in a hundred) is the strength recommended on the bottle; but our Mr. Yates mentioned half that strength, using it made with fairly hot water, and steeping the claws in it. Twice a day, we should think, would be sufficient.

A Talking Raven.

Seeing in the "Daily Mail" mention of a talking Rook, reminds me, writes "J. W." that when a boy my father (then residing at the Gate Inn, Finedon) had a Raven, taken young from the nest, which learned to talk with quite a manly voice. This bird would call all the children, seven in number; would call the ostler when anyone approached the house, and would also distinctly call the men on the farm, particularly those employed in threshing, much to their annoyance.

Birds on Blackstone Edge.

Mr. John Naden, president of Rochdale O.C., sends us a cutting from the "Manchester Evening News," of an article which gives an interesting account of a ramble across Blackstone Edge. The writer says: The top of Blackstone Edge is a wild bleak moor, and a vast acreage is taken up with a succession of reservoirs. They are a surprising sight, some 1,300 feet above the sea. A lengthy ramble was taken across the "huge and desolate moorland," and a visit paid to the neighbourhood of the nesting-place of a colony of Black-headed Gulls. It seems a most extraordinary thing for Gulls to choose such a nesting site, far from the sea, on a cold, bleak, and windy moor. Upon the evening stated twenty-five to thirty were seen. The colony is said to be a thriving one. Bird life generally was extremely limited on the mountain top. At the side of one reservoir a pair of Wheaters were seen, and along the shores were several Sandpipers. Wheeling over the moorland were two or three Lapwings, and, with the exception of the Gulls, these were all the birds met with. It was reported at the inn that they never see a House Sparrow! On the sides of the mountain bird life was more in evidence. Grouse were seen, and more than one Ring-Ouzel was singing. The voice of the latter—"Mountain Blackbird," as it is often called—is wild and piercing, and the notes carry a long way across the quiet wastes. On the more sheltered slopes there were Meadow Pipits, and they, too, were in song. There is no doubt that a goodly variety of birds frequent Blackstone Edge and the other lonely moors around, during the course of the year, but the above-mentioned were all that were met with that evening. Later, the more wooded gardens and coughs about Littleborough were, by comparison, full of song; Thrushes and Blackbirds sang their best, and the Willow Wren's voice was also heard. In one pleasant spot there was a prosperous rookery. From Littleborough through Rochdale, one is back in Manchester again by express train in a little more than half an hour.

First Feather and British and Foreign Bird Show held in Legs of Man Assembly Rooms June 11. There was an entry of 72 birds, which is very good considering the show was restricted to a five-mile radius. The buff Norwich was a splendid one, an entry of 19 giving the judge, Mr. J. Hopkins, a stiff task. Bullfinches were a grand class, some of the birds being fit to win at big shows. Mr. H. Young secured special for best bird in show with a grand yellow Norwich, also special for best Norwich and special for most entries. Mr. J. Lomas secured special for second best bird with a lovely Forciguer, put down in grand condition. Mr. A. Horton, a first year novice, secured special for best Yorkshire with a very typical bird. There was a very fair "gate," and everybody was charmed with our show-room, in which also we intend to hold our open show. Mr. W. Correspondence.

The Sparrow Improved.

SIR,—A friend of mine, in Australia, has a Sparrow which he says sings just like a Canary. I may say that it was reared by a Canary, and has always been with them. I wrote and asked him if the Australian Sparrows were any different to ours, and he says not—they are just the common House Sparrows. I thought this might interest some of your readers.

The Appeal for a Chatham Fancier.

SIR,—Respecting Mr. Bradly's appeal, I should like you to acknowledge the undermentioned sums. Amount previously acknowledged, £2 4s. 6d. Portsmouth Fanciers per Mr. Frampton, 10s.; Isle of Thanet Fanciers, per Mr. Boncey, 8s. 6d. Total up to date, £3 3s. Will all those who have lists let me have them back as early as convenient?

A Siskin-Canary Muling Problem

SIR,—Would one of your old readers advise me? I breed mules from Siskin and Canary. Last year I had three nests, three, four and five young in each nest, and all lived. This year I have put the same two birds together, and they seem to have paired alright, yet I have had no young birds. The hen has sat on three lots of eggs. They both seem quite fit, so I am quite at a loss to know the reason of such bad luck. Both birds are two years old only, so I thought I should have had even better luck than last year.

OLD SALT.

A Remedy for Asthma.

SIR,—In reply to Captain Starlight's query re the above, I have pleasure in giving the following recipe. Let him obtain one ounce of tincture of capsicum, a quarter of an ounce of spirits of chloroform, one drachm of citrate of iron, one drachm of salvolatile, and sufficient water to make eight ounces. A few drops of this mixture should be given (on a lump of sugar) in the cage every day. I have used the mixture in relation to asthma with success. All birds affected should be isolated from the others so as to prevent contagion. My advice to all is to buy and read CAGE BIRDS each week; it contains a wealth of information.

The Yorkshire Canary Club.

To Novice Members.

SIR,—The Committee of the Yorkshire Canary Club beg to call your attention to the very advantageous new scheme for Novice Members. Provided a sufficient number of new novice members are received, we intend to offer the sum of £5 to be divided into three or four prizes to be competed for by novice members of the Yorkshire Union who join the Y.C.C., and every variety of the Yorkshire Canary is eligible. The opportunity they will have in not only competing for the Union medals, but also one of these valuable prizes, will show them how desirable it is to join the Y.C.C. Tho subscription is only 2s. 6d. per annum. Names for membership should be sent to:

More Mules from Mules.

SIR,—When reading CAGE BIRDS to-day, I notice Mr. Murray has reared youngsters from a cock Linnet mule and a hen Canary. I should like to inform readers that I also have succeeded in rearing two youngsters from a dark cock Linnet mule and hen Canary. They are now three weeks old, and are in good health at present. One is clear, and the other marked on head.

R. FARRANCE.

[Is our correspondent quite clear that his bird is really a "dark Linnet Mule," and not a marked Canary, and that no Canary had access to the hen? Would he be willing for one of our experts to examine the young? This question of Mule breeding is a very interesting one.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—"Convince a man against his will, he's of the same opinion still," is as true to-day as when it was first written. The wiseacres who constantly deny the possibility of fertility in Mules have a hard nut to crack just now. Here, for instance, is Mr. J. M. Murray, who declares that he has bred from a Linnet Mule and hen Canary no less than six or seven young ones, and to prove his statement sends them to a public show in order that fanciers may examine them; and yet, in spite of all, several of those present were sceptical, and declared that they were neither more nor less than just ordinary Linnet Mules. This to me is exceedingly strange, and I should like to ask these sceptics: What possible advantage can it be to Mr. Murray to try and deceive upon the question? What has he to gain by it? Why not call the man a liar and deceiver, and have done with it! Surely it is hardly fair and fancier-like to doubt his word. The fact is I am simply amazed that fanciers who have tried to do what Mr. Murray has done and failed, should now doubt the word of an honest brother fancier, and insinuate that there must have been some underhand work. The fact is, Sir, I have known for years as a positive fact that fertility in Mules is not an impossibility, and have previously written twice to CAGE BIRDS stating a case which came under my own observation—a case in which a bird was hatched, lived a fortnight, and had been bred from a cock Linnet and a hen Goldfinch-Canary Mule. I have the greatest pleasure in congratulating Mr. Murray upon his unique success, and hope to have the pleasure of seeing at least some of these birds—say at the next Crystal Palace Show.

J. C. WILMOT.

A Recipe for a Washable Distemper.

SIR,—As I promised in your issue of May 14 to give a good recipe for distempering bird-rooms and bird cages, I have pleasure now in doing so. Get enough newly-slacked lime to make a pailful when mixed, and add colouring in powder, which can be bought very cheap (and almost any colour can be got), and also dissolve one pound of glue size in powder and well mix. Then it is ready for use. Keep stirring while using. This is very cheap in the making, looks well, and is very fast. The use of lime makes it a disinfectant at the same time.

M. WRIGHT.

To Lessen the "Dead in Shell" Evil.

SIR,—Having read and heard so much about young birds being "dead in shell," I should like to give fanciers the method I adopted years ago to ensure hatching, and which has never failed. Before then I had my share of "dead in shell." I have a small camel-hair brush, such as you get for a penny, and when the eggs have been sat upon for about seven days, I take the brush, wet it well in my mouth, and I go over them as if painting them. I do this about three more times, especially the day before hatching. If any fancier will do likewise, I guarantee he will have no more full-grown young "dead in shell."

JOHN GOSLING.

Do Thunderstorms Affect Bird Breeding?

SIR,—Being a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, I would like to know if any of my fellow readers have been troubled much with the thunderstorms which we have had lately, as out of two nests of eleven eggs I only reared two young; the remaining nine eggs being with about half formed young in them. As I am only a novice, and this my first attempt, it was rather disappointing to me, but with my two last nests I have been much more successful, rearing seven out of eight eggs, for which I give all credit to the reading of your handbook "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and CAGE BIRDS. I wish every success to your valuable paper.

H. C. WINN.

A White Scotch Fancy Canary.

SIR,—It may interest readers of CAGE BIRDS to know that I have, out of a nest of three young Scotch Fancies, one pure white one. It is five weeks old, and bred from prize parents. It is very promising and looks like making into a show specimen, which may be heard of again. I have kept and bred scores of different kinds of birds for the past 25 years, but never in my experience did I ever manage to get a white one; which I think is a very rare occurrence. I may say that the same pair of birds last year bred a bird that could not grow a tail, and has not done so up to the present time. The same hen is now sitting on 4 eggs again, and I am hoping out of this nest she will produce a black one; so then I shall with ordinary good luck be able to compete against either black or white.

CHAS. KELSEY.

Bird Breeding Barred in Bradford.

SIR,—I would like to call your attention to the enclosed cutting from the "News of the World." "Tilley Hudlow, 2 years, residing in the Wapping-road district of Bradford, has been admitted to the Bradford Children's Hospital, suffering from injuries to the feet. During a brief absence of the mother the child was attacked, presumably by rats, which have been frequently seen about the premises, and an examination showed that the flesh on the feet had been severely bitten". I think this is horrible, and it occurred to me that the Bradford Health Committee could find far more worthy work exterminating this rat plague than in trying to prevent the inhabitants of the town keeping a few harmless bird pets. I should like to hear what some of the learned gentlemen on the committee consider most dangerous to health, their rats or the Canaries?

JOHN FORREST.

Seven Eggs in a Nest.

SIR,—I am a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, and seeing a letter from Mr. Clark, who wants to know if any other fancier has had a nest of seven young this season, I may say I have a small Border Fancy hen that had five young from five eggs in the first nest, and seven young from seven eggs in the second nest; and all are "on the sticks" and doing well. She is now sitting on five more eggs. I think this will be a record in hatching for a hen of the first year. I have had a very good season so far—eighteen young from two pairs, and I did not pair the birds up until the first week in April. I am only a beginner in the Fancy, but with the help I have received from CAGE BIRDS and "Canary Breeding for Beginners," by Claude St. John, I have made a very good start.

Cutting Birds' Tongues.

SIR,—Every year at about this time the boys and young men begin to get Jackdaws, Magpies, and Jays, and hand-rear them; and as soon as the birds can feed themselves some ignorant "know-all" or other says that the birds must have their tongues cut before they get any older, or else they will never talk. Some are so ignorant as to take them to some man who, they will tell you, understands it, and cuts lots. I know that some tongues have been cut, and that I have prevented a good many others from being cut which have been brought to me for the same purpose. I generally propose to start on the owners first, and if it improves their speech, I say, then I will do the birds'. They are soon off when I tell them that. I often think it would be a good plan for the schoolmasters to tell them off, and point out the cruelty and absurdity of this superstition, which I find still dies very hard, especially in country places.

NIMROD.

Why is the Scotch Fancy Canary Declining?

SIR,—The remark is often heard that the Scotch Fancy Canary is "away with it," and certainly it has not the hold that it once had. Fancier after fancier has given this graceful member of the feathered tribe up, and their places are not being filled. The outlook is serious, and unless a new interest arises the bird will be lost. Among other things, I do not think societies have a right way of appointing judges. That important part is left to a few, and they take those out of their own circle. Would it not be far better to get every member (say, for last year) to send in a list to the number required, and select them in the order of vote? I would like to see all fanciers taking an active interest in shows. We have lots of one-day-interested fanciers turning up on the show day, but they do not care a fig what may come over the Association the rest of the year. If shows are to flourish fanciers will have to get ahead of that. Fanciers are too easy-going; this I put down to want of thought. I hope friends will come along and express their opinions and rouse the brethren.

A FANCIER.

Remarkable Action of a Pair of Bullfinches.

SIR,—It may interest some of your readers to hear of a clever pair of Bullies in our garden. Some little time ago my youngest daughter discovered a Bullfinch's nest in a fence in the field beyond our garden, about 200 yards from the house, and she used to daily visit the nest to report progress. In due course the young ones hatched out, and she was most anxious to have a young one when they were old enough to be taken. I decided to hang a cage in the hedge close to the nest for the parents to get use to, and last Friday evening thought it time to transfer the nest into the cage, as the youngsters seemed fairly well-feathered, and were growing quickly. I left the cage door open, hoping that the old birds would go in and feed them, but on Saturday morning could not feel sure that they had been near, as the youngsters looked very hungry, and were opening their beaks wide for food. After consulting a friend about them, I removed the cage into the house, and the children took charge of them in their nursery upstairs, and we commenced feeding them from a quill with scalded bread and scalded rape seed about noon, and succeeded until Sunday morning in getting a certain amount of food into them. On this Sunday morning the cage stood on a table near the nursery window, which was open, and the nurse and children were sitting reading in the room, when quite unexpectedly the mother Bullie came in at the window, evidently attracted by the chirruping of the youngsters, who were out of the nest and hopping round the cage. She jumped on to the cage, and started feeding her babies through the wires. She was followed soon after by father Bullie, and the pair have come in and out of the nursery incessantly ever since, and are feeding the young all day. We close the window at dusk, and cover up the cage for warmth, and let the parents commence feeding them again each morning at five o'clock. This seems to us worth recording in your paper. It would be interesting to know how the parents found out their youngsters when the nest was 200 yards from the house. As long as the occupants of the room do not move about too much, the Bullies go on feeding their young as if no one was near.

The Care of Birds.

SIR,—I read in a recent issue a contribution by A. Green, in which he detailed the starving to death of birds on three different occasions, this silly brutality being caused by "inevitable absence from home." He ought to be ashamed of the occurrences. There is little excuse for one lapse in this direction, but no careful or decent person would, I think, be likely to be guilty of any repetition of such an "accident" to the unfortunate birds in his care.

BIRD LOVER.

[We fully agree with our correspondent's expression of opinion. What the precise circumstances surrounding the losses were we do not know, but that birds should be allowed to starve on the ground of "inevitable absence from home" is deplorable, and deserving of strong censure.—EDITOR.]

A Green Food Matter.

SIR,—Several instances have come under my notice this year in which dandelion leaves have caused a good many deaths among young Canaries, and have upset the old ones, causing them to have diarrhœa and inflammation. Why they should do so if the young tender leaves only are given, I cannot explain, as I am and have always been a great believer in the young shoots of this green food. I have used it for years with no bad results. I dare say bad results might accrue from the use of old leaves, or coarse, rank-grown ones. Stale leaves might be the cause, or some other kind of green food. Perhaps some of your numerous readers may have had similar incidents and will relate their experiences with the green food used this season.

OLD BREEDER.

The Type of the Lancashire Canary.

SIR,—I have read all the letters with very great interest. No doubt they will have done a lot of good. I have bred this variety for 15 years, and some of the birds that won them would not have a look in now. Most judges favour Lancashires with a little Crest in them (on the principle of the Irishman, who says that an Englishman is a better Englishman with a little Irish blood in his veins). I have known Judge Bexson award 1st prize to a bird that could not stand up at all; but having a good big head and broad shoulders it was given 1st. I have known Coppies put down for having too much Crest in them; and a Plainhead, out of the same nest, has taken first in its class. Even at the last Rochdale show a bird was shown in the young Coppy class, and took 3rd prize. Ever so many said it should not have been there. I called the judge's attention to it. He said: Perhaps it has, but I like the bird, and could not put it any further down in a class of 10. And its brother (so I was told), stood 3rd in the young Plainhead class, and was claimed by a very successful Lancashire breeder. I believe all winning Lancashires have a cross in them; and if we don't cross to improve the Lancashire, it is the only bird that isn't cross-mated. I know some are brought out too soon, and show too much of the Crest properties. I remember Mr. Collinge exhibiting a ticked Buff Coppy as a young bird in the Lancashire classes, and it stood 1st every time shown that season. Next season it was put down by the same judge for having too much Crest in it. At some shows we see Horseshoe Coppies, and in the same shows in another class a nice drooping Coppy. Both kinds of Coppies have taken 1st prize. What have we to do? Then, if you pair two Coppies, and both are slightly ticked, they will produce young ones showing Crest properties. Never mind how we breed them, let us get them big enough, for a good big one will beat a little good one any day at any show.

The Meaning of Song.

SIR,—Would some reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, kindly inform me through your columns, why Canaries or wild birds sing when caged? Is it a proof that they are happy, and pleased with their treatment, or is it only an attraction for the opposite sex, and not a sign of contentment? I should be very pleased to have the opinion of some fellow fancier.

A. HOLLINGSHEAD.

Hybrid Breeding with Hawfinches.

SIR,—As the breeding season is now with us, and all kinds of British birds have made a start to increase their species, and as the Hawfinch is now getting quite a common bird amongst fanciers, it might be suggested to those fanciers who have the convenience of a good-sized outdoor aviary, to try and get the Hawfinches to pair with other species. I don't expect anyone has had as yet any good results from this bird, but still, it is only in its infancy, so to speak, as a Hybrid breeder. Some may have tried it ere this; but no good results have been recorded as far as I am aware, not even to the extent of having fertile eggs. I still, however, think there is a future before this bird as a producer of Hybrids, and I should very much like to see those who have good steady birds giving them a trial. Both sexes could be used for this purpose. Which will prove the better, time alone can show. The most likely birds I can suggest are: the cock Hawfinch with the hen Bullie, and also vice versa. Hand-reared birds would, of course, be much preferable if you have them; but if not, try what you have by you for this season, and look out another season for hand-reared birds. Then there is the Greenfinch. The hens of this species nest most readily in either cages or aviary, and would be suitable for making a start with; the cock Greenie also readily breeds in confinement, especially so in an aviary, and might also mate with a hen Hawfinch—one never knows what may turn up in this hobby, and the most unlikely things often happen. Again, the cock Goldfinch will often readily pair with most of the Finch family, and he, too, might be given a trial with a hen Hawfinch. If this bird should mate, a good offspring should be the result. If anyone will give these birds a trial and then, at the end of the season, relate their experience, it will, I am quite sure, interest many of your numerous readers. By all means give the pairs plenty of places to nest in, and various kinds of materials. Old nests of various birds might with advantage be placed in different parts of the aviary in quiet nooks and corners to encourage them to either take to these nests or make one of their own. It would be of advantage to have small pieces of branches of fir, laurel, pine, gorse, ivy, box, or other evergreens, either stuck in flower pots on the back wall, pieces of old bark, or cork fastened to the wall or other quiet corners; every inducement, in fact, should be given them to encourage them to nest. Moss, hay, straws, roots, or fibres might be stuck in here, and there, and left hanging out; all these little devices help the birds in the building way, and are often very successful. It is always as well to be most careful and have patience with them; leave them alone, and do not interfere with these nests or eggs, or be too anxious for results. I hope these few lines may be the means of these grand birds being given a trial.

"HYBRID."

In Praise of the Red-Crested Cardinal.

SIR,—The Red-crested Cardinal has always been one of my favourite foreigners. His lovely plumage of red and slate gray, and his sprightly manners and funny little song, make him a real ornament to the aviary. The cock bird is really beautiful when in full plumage—the head, crest and throat are a brilliant scarlet—the upper parts of the bird are slate grey, with darker colour on the tail and flight feathers of the wings, the under-parts being white. The beak is whitish, the legs are dull grey, and the bird measures about eight inches from beak to tail. The female can be distinguished from the male by her less brilliant colouring. The song of this Cardinal is not varied much, though it is surprisingly loud and agreeably cheerful. It somewhat resembles the first warbling notes of the Blackbird when he begins to sing, but there he ceases in his resemblance to that minstrel in song. The call-note of the bird is a bright chirp, and this note is used whether in eating or in flight. The bird is quite hardy, and with good shelter of thick bushes will survive our coldest winters. The food of the Red Cardinal consists chiefly of canary and millet seed. The species are also very fond of melon and sunflower seeds. If grass grows in the aviary they will always be on the look-out for insects, and nothing will delight the birds more than to find a cockroach, over which tasty morsel they will dispute with each other, showing disapproval by open beak and harsh notes uttered in the throat. This beautiful denizen of an aviary—the Red-crested Cardinal—delights in his bath provided the sun is shining, and very often will have two or three baths in the day. This is a great deal the cause of the beautiful plumage and healthy condition of the bird. There is one drawback to this Cardinal in that he is best kept with those of his own kind. If kept in a general aviary with other birds he is apt to be quarrelsome and upset their nesting arrangements, though, of course, he may be kept with birds that know how to look after themselves. But given a good-sized aviary with plenty of room in company with five or six others of his kind, this bird, by his sprightly ways, cheerful song and confiding manner, will give his owner many a delightful hour. I have not bred this bird personally but other aviculturists have done so and their experiences will best teach the beginner how to set about it. I can thoroughly recommend this bird as a most delightful and beautiful pet and easily tamed; and I cannot name any other foreigner, as hardy and as easily acclimatised, which will afford so much delight and amusement as the Red Cardinal. A BIRD LOVER.

The Hand-Rearing of Thrushes.

SIR,—As the season is now full upon us when plenty of young Thrushes may be procured and easily reared by hand, a few lines I hope may prove of use to those who wish to try their hands at this. I should never advise anyone to do so, without they are prepared to go to a certain amount of trouble, i.e., by early feeding (from daylight) until dark. During the time you are feeding them they must be kept scrupulously clean, and their droppings removed several times a day. They should be taken when a good size, just before they leave the nest; some like to take them when they are about 10 days old, or even younger, as they will open their mouths more readily. But I have always found that the longer you leave them with their parents the stronger they will become. They should be taken in their nest, and put in a basket with some hay or straw round the nest (it will then be more easy to clean them out), and covered up with a cloth. This quiets them down, and they rest better after being fed, and will keep in the nest longer, which is a consideration at feeding time. The feeding stick I use for them is a pen-nib forced in a piece of stick; the other end acts as a trough to hold the food in sufficient quantities for one mouthful. When feeding keep on giving them the food as long as they will open their mouths, and this should be repeated every two hours during the day. The first nest of these birds I brought up was when I was only a lad of 10 years old—three in the nest. These were fed only on barley meal, and were not fed before 8 in the morning, and I left off feeding them at 8 at night. All three were raised. Two hens were set at liberty when I found out their sex. The cock lived for years, and was not only a good whistler, but a fair mimic as well. Since then I have brought up many a nest on the same food. But of late years that food has not been good enough for me, as I wanted stronger birds. The food I now use is made of equal portions of barley meal and hard-boiled egg, mixed with new milk, boiled, with three teaspoonfuls of soaked ants' eggs mixed with them. On this feed I find I get stronger and better birds, and birds which live longer in cages. After they can feed themselves any good Thrushes' food suits them, with plenty of garden snails. You can give them the snails with the shells on; either crack them, or put a stone in the cage for the bird to crack them on, which it will readily do. They are very fond of bathing, so should have plenty of sawdust at their cage bottom, or else there will be plenty of mess. You cannot be too particular about keeping them clean, but they will soon repay you for your trouble. If the hens are not wanted (though some hens are better marked than the cocks, and are good for showing), they should be given their liberty. There have been cases on record of their breeding in a cage, but cages are much too small; but a small or large aviary would be quite different. The hens could then be turned in these, or might be tried in crossing with a Blackbird or vice versa. You will wonder why I have not advised giving the young Thrushes either mealworms or earth worms during the time of hand-feeding, or even small pieces of raw beef (as some do). I have tried nearly all ways, and I find my way the best. Any of these could be given later, when the birds are able to pick up; in fact, nothing comes much amiss to them in the way of scraps. I have also, in years gone by when I had plenty of scope in a large garden, caged the young birds and let the old ones feed them; I have had some success and some failures this way, but the failures have been through ignorance, and were not the old ones' fault. If the bath can be arranged to hang on the cage it would be all the better: this should be given first thing after breakfast or before dinner, so that the bird or birds can get dry before night. I hope these few lines will be of interest.

A THRUSH-LOVER.

A Reader's Method of Mule Breeding.

SIR,—Mule breeding is an interesting hobby. But I should like to refer in particular to that king of all Mules, the Goldfinch-Canary Mule. In the first place, I always like a 36in. double breeding cage, 16in. high by 10in. or 11in. broad, which allows them plenty of room for exercise, which keeps the birds healthy and out of mischief. In the centre of the cage I have a sliding door, by which I can run the Finch from one compartment to the other. I have a separate door in each end of the cage. I fit the cage up with a glass seed hopper and two china egg trays in each compartment, and hang a nest pan in each corner of the cage, so that the hen can choose which one she has a fancy for. After she has settled down and built her nest I keep the Finch in the other compartment. I always maintain that you have better results in the breeding of Mules if you have them in separate rooms from the Canaries, as the Goldfinch is not likely to do so well if he hears Canaries singing; he seems to think he is out of place, and not wanted. But when he is not hearing the Canary's song and the hen calls, he answers her at once. Some fanciers will pooh-pooh this idea, and say they have been successful with the birds in the same room; well, I have no doubt they have been, but I think if they used separate rooms they would have been more successful still. A great lot has been written to the effect that the Goldfinch must be house-moulted before he will breed, and a great number of old fanciers still believe it. Now, I find a Greypate will breed quite freely the following season if you have got him into proper condition. Condition is everything in Mule breeding. If your Finch is in full song, and that you can tell by the beak being clear, with no black spots on it, then you can try him. I will now tell you how to get your Finch into condition. In the first place, choose your Finch. I don't care whether it is an English or a Foreign Finch, so long as I get a good stout bird. Markings I don't trouble about in a Finch, but I must have one that is very docile and easily steadied down. Wild and active Finches seldom make good breeders. Having selected your Finch, don't put him in a back cage; put him in a Norwich show cage or one no smaller, and hang him on a nail about five feet from the floor, and every time you pass him take the cage off the nail and handle it, speaking kindly to the bird, and putting a few hemp seeds in his egg tray; and another time you can let him have a thistle head or a little bit of sweet apple or a few niger seeds by way of a change. In a very short time thus, he will have gained confidence, and will look for your coming with his tit-bit. It is only by kindness you can steady and tame a British bird. For a Finch's every-day diet I give ten parts canary seed to four parts flax and four parts rape: and in the drinking water I add twice a week five drops of dandelion essence, also twice a week a small portion of hemp and thistle seed. I never give much hemp seed unless I find him backward in condition, and then I let him have a good supply of hemp and niger, and a little egg and biscuit each day. I always like to get the Finch into condition as early in the season as possible, so that I can run him in a flight cage along with the hens that I intend Muling with; and then I watch very carefully to see if he is mating up to one of them, when that is the hen for me. I find it is far better for him to choose his own mate than for me to put him up with one. The hens I use for Muling are clear yellow, deep-chested Norwich, with a dash of cinnamon blood in them. I don't believe in your small, almost white Sib-bred birds. I go for colour and size, as you can always breed small birds. Then with good clear hens of the Norwich type, and with luck I may have a clear or ticked one turn up, when I may have something worth looking at. If not, I am sure of size and colour in the dark ones, which I must have, if they are to do well on the show bench. Having now got your Finch and hen ready, put them together in the double breeding cage, and let them have a little egg food each day and a young leaf of dandelion, or a sprig of watercress; and throw a little niger seed amongst the grit on the bottom of the cage, so that the hen can pick it up. It may save egg-binding when she is about to lay. Hang up four nest bags for the purposes of nest-building, and as soon as the nest is built, and you think she will lay, shut the Finch off in the other compartment at night, or he may put his long beak through the egg purely out of mischief. Take the egg away in the morning, and let him back along with the hen; and repeat same until she has laid her fourth egg. Let her then have the lot, and remove the Finch, so that she can hatch the young in peace and quietness. When the young are hatched I always feed them on egg and crushed biscuits. I use Nile or Maria biscuit, because in most of the cheaper makes ammonia is used in the making of them, and I know from experience this is deadly to young birds; so if you cannot get the above-named make use stale sweet bread. When the young are about a week old I let the hen have some green food (watercress or lettuce), and now and again some soaked rape seed. I also put a little powdered cuttle-fish in the egg food; it helps to make bone. Further, I let the hen have a tray full of crushed hemp seed. I have not stated the time I start breeding. Well, that all depends. When I consider my birds are fit it is time; and you lose nothing by waiting, as breeding with half-fit birds is only a waste of time. I may say I have had a nest of three Goldfinch Mules hatched and reared in a cold room in the month of March. One thing I must say, in conclusion, have patience, and if not successful at first, try again, and your labour will be rewarded.

To Prevent "Sweating."

Sent by Mr. F. Mitchell, 129, Regency Street, Westminster, London, S.W.

Readers of CAGE BIRDS troubled with sweating hens might do well to try the following idea. First see the holes in the nest-pan are not clogged, and then get some slats of wood about ⅛in. wide and ⅛in. thick; paste these in the pan as per illustration. Then just rub a little paste on the sticks and drop some moss on to them—sufficient to hide the crevices. Then only supply moss to build with—just enough to line the sides properly. This simple remedy goes a long way towards preventing sweating.—F. MITCHELL.

No. 421.
To Outwit Would-be Runaways.

Sent by Mr. A. Sutherland Grant, 5, Bridge Street, Kirkcudbright.

As the breeding season is now practically on us, we are confronted with many of the usual difficulties in regard to the young. I have tried to illustrate an idea of my own which I have used for the past two years and found very satisfactory. Every fancier knows the knack young birds have of getting out of their cages by means of the water holes, etc., and how difficult it is at times to outwit them in this respect. I lost several of my best birds through their getting out in the manner above described before I hit on this plan. As will be seen by the illustration, it consists of a small piece of ½in. wire meshing, bent to the exact shape of the drinking vessel used. One end is then slipped through the cage wires and brought round to the outside again, so as to form a hinge to allow of the drinker being removed for cleaning, etc., purposes. The other end is simply held in position between the two wires on the opposite side of the drinker. The cut ends of wire mesh are all turned in to avoid damage to the birds —A. SUTHERLAND-GRANT.

The Shows.

TORBAY O.S. (Paignton).

The first of our nest feather table shows was held at Newman's Room, Paignton, on June 14th, when 17 points were scored by Messrs. Parnell and Son in the Yorkshire section, and 43 points by J. N. and J. Jeffery in the Norwich section. Two medals being competed for in these sections, it was hoped competition would have been keen, but unfortunately it has been a poor start for most of our breeders; but there are better hopes of a good second show, which is to be held July 12th.—J. N. JEFFERY.

CHESTERFIELD AND DIS. C.B.S.

Members' F.F. Show, held on June 15th, at the Queen's Head, Gluman Gate, when about 40 entries were staged. They were of a very good average quality. Mr. L. Eight new members were elected. The next meeting will be on July 16th, at 7.30. Washing Exhibition and Table Show—1 class each for Yorks, and Norwich young birds; and to fix open show date. New members cordially welcomed.

WIBSEY AND DIS. C.B.S.

First feather show, held June 11th. Judge, Mr. A. W. Varley. The number of exhibits was not very large, owing to a lot of members having had bad results with their first nest. The quality however, was extra good, and three of the exhibits changed hands at good figures. The principal point winners were: Hanson 14, Hylton 13, Crowther and Hudson 11, Ormondroyd 10. The judge's awards gave every satisfaction. Mr. W. Hillas scored 14 points in the selling class competition.

GREAT HORTON O.S.

Great Horton O.S. held their annual open show of Canaries in their first feather on June 18th, in the Congregational School, Mr. E. B. Denton, of Windhill, officiating as judge, his awards meeting with approval throughout. In connection was held an exhibition of British birds, etc., for members of the Yorkshire County B.B. and M. Club only, and this latter section proved very interesting. For Canarics twelve classes were scheduled. Unevenly marked yellow Yorks. and both Norwich classes were cancelled, and the remaining nine classes contained ninety-two entries, only ten per class—a meagre response, no doubt accounted for to some extent by the number of members' shows that were being held on the same date in the West Riding. For the Y.C.B.B. and M.C. members, five classes were provided; softbills were cancelled, and 28 birds were staged in the four classes standing, some very nice birds amongst them. The management was first-rate, and Mr. J. Holroyd, the able secretary, is to be complimented, his efforts deserving a better reward.

CL. YELL. YKS. HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING C.B.S.

Annual nest feather show, held in the White Lion Hotel, June 18, when upwards of a hnndred exhibits turned up. The birds were of good average merit; in fact, the Norwich were the best seen in the district. Here Mr. H. Wilson secured medal for the best young bird in show, and also the second medal for second best, but he had to give way to third bird, which belonged to Mr. A. Notley, as the same exhibitor is not allowed to win both. The Crests, Cinnamons, Yorkshires, etc., were not quite so numerous, but were of a good quality. The British contained some really fine specimens. The secretary, Mr. R. H. Dixon, had all in excellent order in quick time, and the judge, Mr. A. Brown, got through his work in a master'y manner, and gave general satisfaction.

YORK CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

First Feather and British Bird Show held at headquarters, All Saints' Schoolroom, June 13th, when 88 birds were staged, and some very good specimens were on view. Canaries were a very choice lot, but small in number, as the Norwich men declined to show; whether they were afraid to risk their champions, or had some very bad luck, I cannot say, but the Yorkshire men showed some very promising youngsters which will be heard of again. The British birds were a grand lot, some very fine Goldfinches and Linnets being staged. The awards seemed to give entire satisfaction.

BANKFOOT AND DIS. C.B.S.

First young bird show, held June 18th, at Bankfoot Schools. A good number of the members were unfortunately unable to exhibit, owing to the birds being either too old or too young. However 51 birds were staged in six classes. A special feature was the strong class of Clear Buffs—17 in number—and the judge, Mr. J. Bailey, stated that this was the best Buff class he had ever judged at a members' show. Mr. G. Hudson won cup for most points with four highest birds; Mr. F. Gelder was second, and Mr. C. ATTERCLIFFE AND DIS. C.B.S.

Annual nest Feather Show, held on June 18th, in the Friends' Adult School, an ideal room for the holding of a bird show, there being plenty of room and light; further, it is central for our members, no one having far to take their exhibits. The entry was a record one, and the quality was extra. The Norwich was far the strongest section, some grand youngsters being staged. Mr. G. A. Watson's clear buff took special for the best young Canary. The Yorkshires were not so strong, most of our members having had good luck with that variety. The British section was very good, Mr. J. Smith taking special for the best. The Novice Section was strong, and Mr. J. Smith put down a grand team. The secretary (Mr. W. Richardson), with the help of Mr. L. Havenhand (President), and the stewards (Messrs. E. Johnson and W. Lockwood), had everything well in hand, the show proving a success. Mr. G. Browning judged, and his awards were well received. Mr. Browning gives us a lecture on Colour Feeding at our next meeting.

ARDWICK AND DIS. C.B.S.

The second annual first feather show was held on June 18th at the Onward Hall, Ashton Old-road. The hall is spacious and lofty, and is provided with a good top light; and the birds can be shown to advantage. The season has apparently not been one of the best with the members up to now. The entry, however, was a fairly good one, although it came below last year's; 70 birds were staged. However, what was lacking in number was made up in quality. The weather was everything that could be wished for, the day being an ideal one. The show was visited by a good number of fanciers and friends, and they had some good birds to look over; several of the youngsters, given the necessary good fortune in the moult, will certainly be heard of again. Mr. Robinson put down a good team of Norwich, capturing the medal for best bird in show with a ticked yellow, "grand one," also lifting three other specials. Other winners of specials were Messrs. Slater, Simpson, Marsland, Knight, Fulcher, Mason, Boothman, Annison, and Trachte. Mr. W. A. Cowgill (Bradford) judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction.

THE DANGER TO THE BRITISH BIRD FANCY.

MR. DENNITHORNE, continuing, said that at one time he used to go down into Wales, where Goldfinches were very plentiful, and by catching a few had been able to get a much-needed holiday without expense, to the great benefit of his health. Now, however, owing to the rich landowners refusing to allow a poor man to set foot on their land (even though it were not in cultivation, but rough mountain land), much more catch a few of the birds, which rightly no man could claim as his exclusive property, this holiday was denied him, so that he was deprived of benefits to his bodily health and a portion of his living by well-to-do faddists and rich land-grabbers, who themselves were able to indulge, through their purse, in their pheasant and partridge shooting, their fox-hunting and such-like "sports." Was there no "cruelty" in these he would like to know? He would say and prove that there was torture perpetrated in these so-called sports. Yet some of the people who indulged in them would like to stop the working-man from even keeping or catching a British bird. Properly fed and looked after the losses amongst the newly-caught birds were very small indeed. He himself had caught six dozen Goldfinches and lost but two, and out of twenty dozen he had succeeded in keeping all but four. He contended that catchers, as a class, were not the cruel individuals some tried to make them out to be. He knew many instances where families had been kept from starvation only through the men being able to catch and sell birds during the winter time. All men were not skilled, neither had they the brain power, but they were compelled to get a livelihood by humble means. They ought not to be despised for that, however. He knew that a few dealers kept their shops and birds in an unsatisfactory manner, but the whole body of bird-keepers ought not to be made to suffer because of these men, who should be made to alter their ways, and he hoped that, as a result of that meeting, they would be able to arrive at a means of preventing their freedom and rights being taken away. If they did not help themselves, no one else could be expected to do so.

MR. MORTLOCK, while appreciating the able speech of Mr. Dennithorne, and agreeing with most of his statements, said that in his experience there certainly was unnecessary cruelty perpetrated by some catchers and some bird-shopkeepers. The position of the bird catchers undoubtedly had its pathetic side, so far as their circumstances in life went. But nothing could excuse the damage done to property, or the illicit "poaching" of pheasants, etc., which he personally knew that bird-catchers had been guilty of; nor could they defend the practice of killing the hen birds of some species which were unfortunate enough to get into the nets. The "pegging" of Chaffinches on Sundays, too, was bad; he had even known men go into churchyards while the people were in church and there set out their limed twigs and call-birds. It was these rough characters that brought both bird-catching and bird-keeping into disrepute, and they could have no sympathy for such men, who were largely responsible for the stopping of straight men like our friend Mr. Dennithorne. "Stopping" (blinding) Chaffinches for the purpose of singing matches was a horribly cruel practice of a few misguided men, which should be put down firmly and effectively. Such things did not help the Fancy, but only helped to bring about the stringent laws which oppressed the humane bird-keepers. He himself would gladly support any movement calculated to bring about a better understanding of the genuine bird-keeper by those responsible for the framing of our laws. We did not want to kill birds, but to keep them alive in the best of health and condition, therefore he contended that we were quite as much protectors of birds as any protection society.

MR. TROWER said that Mr. Mortlock's speech reminded him of what he thought was a fact, viz., that the late Baroness Burdett-Coutts was very much upset at the "pegging" of Chaffinches which went on at her Highgate estate, and so made strong representations to the Government in favour of a Wild Birds' Protection Act.

MR. CRABB said that the idea of a licence struck him as an admirable one, for that would ensure only proper and capable people being authorised to catch birds.—MR. TROWER said he would like to hear the views of catchers and dealers present as to being licensed, and their shops coming under the sanitary laws.—MR. DENNITHORNE said that the shops already came under the sanitary laws, and the inspector could go in at any time, while he could see no use in a licence when no one would let you go on his land.—MR. TROWER said he disagreed. Owners would give permission; and seed-growers were only too glad to see the back of certain birds at certain seasons; if they were not caught they would be shot or destroyed.

MR. GOYMER spoke in favour of the licensing, and strongly against the practice of killing hen birds because they "sharped" the other birds if given their freedom. It could not be defended, and anyone who indulged in it ought never to be allowed to go out catching. If he knew a catcher who did it, he would never buy another bird from him. It was wanton destructiveness. The hens should be let go at a distance from the catching ground.

MR. DAWSON, JUN., said that he was in favour of the licensing proposal; also of the stopping of Sunday bird-catching. The licence would, he thought, make it better for everybody concerned.—MR. DAWSON, SEN., remarked that he doubted whether sufficient licences would be called for to make it worth while for the authorities to take up the scheme.—MR. ASKEW: How would the law apply? If any of us went out to catch a bird at any time, we should have to get a licence. (Laughter, and cries of "Certainly" from many present.)

MR. GOODCHILD deprecated the use of very small cages, such as were commonly seen—a sight he thought certainly calculated to offend humane people, who would also be without the knowledge that the bird-keeper proper did not keep his birds in cages such as those, and thus they would be led to form erroneous opinions as to bird-keeping generally.

MR. PRESTON said that he thought the idea of a licence a good one, if workable; it was, he knew, advocated by many of the dealers and bird-catchers. He realised that it was the dealers who offended most in the matter of small cages. But this was owing to considerations of space, and it must not be overlooked that most birds were in the "back" cages, but a very short time before being sold, while he himself, when asked for a cage, always advised a larger kind (which he kept in stock) for house use by a private person. All dealers would supply large cages if asked for them.—MR. DAWSON, JUN., drew comparisons between the cages and shops of the West-end dealers and those of the East-end. He considered that the latter were responsible for bringing the law down on them. If the East-end dealers kept their shops and birds under the same conditions as did the West-end men, then the R.S.P.C.A. would have no ground of action at all. They did not object to the inspectors visiting their shop providing they were civil and carried out their duties in a proper manner. Dealers must certainly keep both cages and shops clean; if they did not, they were doing the bird trade a lot of harm, and they must expect to meet with trouble.

The Suggested Conference.

SIR,—The sentiments expressed in Mr. P. F. M. Galloway's sensible letter (published in your issue of June 18th) should form the keynote of whatever may be done in the matter of seeking to amend the legislation of this land affecting the taking and keeping of wild birds. The idea of asking the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Society for the Protection of Wild Birds to receive a deputation of representatives of bird-keepers generally I consider an excellent one; and it should pave the way to a better understanding as to the rights of those societies and the privileges of bird-keepers. There is nothing to lose by a friendly hearing (which it now rests with the R.S.P.C.A. and the S.P.W.B., to grant or not), whilst there is everything to gain. And if the deputation is given a fair and friendly hearing, I see no reason why a conference of representatives of the societies named and bird-keepers generally should not be possible. The fact undoubtedly is, as Mr. Galloway hinted in his letter, that the so-called evil of keeping birds in captivity has never been properly considered by those who make it their business to decry its practice; if it were (and the suggested conference would go far to bring about its due consideration), the humanity of the treatment of captive birds, based as it is upon the individual bird-keeper's love for his pets, would come as a great revelation. Of course, there are cases where this humanity is not exercised, but the authorities will find none to more readily condemn the ill-treatment of birds than the bird-keepers themselves, who are always willing to assist in its abolition and prevention. The conference should consist, I suggest, of members of the R.S.P.C.A., the S.P.W.B., the National, Scottish, and Yorkshire County British Bird and Mule Clubs, the Cage Bird and Yorkshire Unions, the London Federation of C.B.S., and a number of non-Fancy and disinterested gentlemen (say, from the London County Council). The objects of the conference should, I suggest, be four-fold: (a) the settlement of the question as to whether or not it is cruel to keep birds in captivity; (b) the determination of the species which may and which may not be so kept, and the several conditions (as to the minimum size of cages, etc.), under which they shall or shall not be confined; (c) the enumeration of the reasons for and against an amendment of the various Wild Birds' Protection Acts; and (d) the formation of a deputation to wait on the Home Secretary for the purpose of urging the importance and necessity of such amendment. I am fully alive to the objections that may be raised to the holding of such a conference; I know we are reckoning on the consent and willingness of our opponents; I know it is well-nigh, if not quite, impossible to decide fully and finally whether in principle it is cruel to keep birds confined in smaller quarters than the whole world; I am aware of the speculative, the adventuresome, the novelty-seeking propensities of a certain section of the exhibiting Fancy; and I do not need to be told that the waiting of a deputation on the House of Commons may more than likely result in the matter being referred to a committee (even if it get as far as that), which means it may be shelved for an indefinite period—I am alive, I say, to all these difficulties, but "fortune favours the brave," and we shall advance not a whit if we do not make the effort to advance. Let us venture, and if we do not have it will not then be our fault. A conference such as I have suggested would, I think, be at least productive of a better understanding between bird-keepers and their mistaken persecutors. The humanity of keeping birds under ideal conditions will, when thus made clear and made known, be brought into a prominence that will redound to the honour of bird-keepers and result in a decision in favour of our beloved hobby.

FRIEND OF THE BIRDS.

SIR,—In my opinion if bird-catchers were licensed it would be the best protection for the wild birds, as everyone who went in for catching would want to understand them and how to get them on seed. This would save hundreds that ought to be saved. I myself can, as a rule, keep above ninety out of a hundred caught. I don't believe in bracing any birds; if I can't get a bird into my net with the call birds singing, he is quite welcome to his liberty. I think we have plenty of wild birds to supply everyone who wants them, and then leave more than plenty to breed. They should be properly looked after when first caught. I have been a bird-catcher for this last eleven years.—B. H.

Strange Nesting Place.

The Magpie has been known to build its nest in a gooseberry bush, but this was in a district where trees were scarce. Upon some of the moors the Carrion Crows nest in low bushes for the same reason.

Starlings and Birds' Eggs.

Some naturalists have lately added another vice to the lengthy list already possessed by the Starling. They contend that he is guilty of destroying the eggs of small birds, especially those nesting on the ground. The writer, who has studied wild birds for many years, has never seen traces of this destruction, however, although such may exist, for the Starling is certainly a very inquisitive bird.

Differences in Eggs.

Taking any half-dozen clutches of our common birds' eggs, say, Blackbirds' or Greenfinches', there will be found a considerable difference in the size of some individual eggs, and also in colour and markings. Occasionally one finds a batch of Thrushes' eggs hardly larger than Finches'. One can only account for this by assuming that they are the product of a young, late-nest bird. But perfectly blue eggs without markings can hardly be accounted for in the same manner; and yet a regular nest hunter may find such clutches year after year. It may be that the young hens from such eggs would reproduce them the following season. And so we get among our Thrushes what may be almost called a strain of clear-coloured egg-layers.

The Food of Rooks.

Mr. W. E. Collinge, hon. secretary, acting on behalf of the Council of the Land Agents' Society, last year had Rooks sent to him every fortnight from forty-one counties in England and Wales. Their evidence conclusively proves, it is said, that the common supposition that Rooks feed very largely upon beetles, insect larvæ, and wireworms is entirely erroneous. In addition to the 631 Rooks examined by Mr. Collinge last year, he had previously dissected 58 specimens, while Mr. D. T. Thring similarly examined 141 birds in 1908. A summary of the results of these investigations showed that 67.5 per cent. of the food of the 830 birds consisted of grain, 3.5 per cent. of seeds, fruit, roots, and miscellaneous vegetable matter, 10.5 per cent. of earthworms, and 3.5 per cent. of eggs, young game, field-mice, etc.

THE DANGER TO THE BRITISH BIRD FANCY.

Mr. A. Silver remarked that the question was: What are we going to do? They must consider what was fair from both sides of the question, and go to the root of the trouble. He then read a short paper in which he enumerated the causes he considered were bringing the bird fancy and trade into disrepute—amongst them the condition of the bird-shops and the birds therein, the behaviour of some catchers, the "bracing" of birds, and the destruction of hen birds, the use of the "back" cage, Lark runner and Thrush cages as seen in the bird-shops, the breaking of the law relating to the close season, etc. These things must be avoided. What was wanted was a league of bird-keepers to uphold aviculture and defend the hobby—to take action against unreasonable restrictions any persons might try to impose upon them by means of the law. Such a league should have in view the benefitting of every branch of bird-keeping, and have the wholehearted support of every bird-keeper, without which it would be useless. Mr. Silver then traversed the idea that bird-keepers were responsible for certain species becoming rare or extinct. He pointed out that numerous industries and many workers would suffer if our hobby was lost. Law breaking the league would not countenance; it would work for the betterment of captive birds generally, and not recognise on the show bench British-taken Swallow-like birds, Kingfishers, Hoopoes, Ravens, Golden Orioles, Bearded Tits, etc., while the killing of small birds for food or plumes it would in no way recognise. When they had the league in working order they could start and arrange to send delegates to meet the S.P.W.B., or combat any attempted further legislation by putting their view of the matter before the Home Secretary. The league could do a lot of good work, but ought not to take upon itself any governing or authoritative attitude, like the Kennel Club, and other unions known, for that would be detrimental to its existence. It would act as a kind of guardian to the Fancy.

Mr. J. W. Ramsden said that he thoroughly agreed with Mr. Trower's views. He had known many cases of cruelty by catchers (such as the wholesale killing of hen birds) which had resulted in the telegraph wires being set into motion and prosecutions instituted. Landowners and others would not stand that sort of thing, and they could not expect the sympathy of people while such acts were perpetrated. The majority of the shops, too, he considered were kept in anything but a satisfactory manner, some being simply disgraceful—it was positively brutal, for instance, to leave dead birds in store cages with the live ones hopping over their bodies, a sight he had seen more than once. It was a puzzle to him why the R.S.P.C.A. did not prosecute in such cases; they would have no difficulty in securing convictions. Those were the things which brought discredit upon the Fancy. The true bird-keeper loved his birds and kept them in a totally different manner. He would like those who opposed bird-keeping as being cruel to go into such a bird-room as that of Mr. Maxwell and see the care bestowed on the inmates, and the condition they were in. Could anyone truthfully say that Mr. Maxwell's birds were not far better off and happier in the winter than those flying about the country? It was the catchers and the dealers who had wrought the mischief, and they must speak plainly about such matters. If they would mend their ways, much of the present trouble would cease to exist. He was recently reading a lecture by Mr. Browning, given at Plymouth, and published in Cage Birds, and the lecturer said that out of 100 fresh-caught Goldfinches, 90 per cent. died. If that was so, it was disgraceful, and he was sorry to see any paper publish such a statement, for people had no right to catch, and ought not to be encouraged to catch birds amongst which there was such a heavy mortality.

Mr. G. E. Weston rose and said that he thought Mr. Ramsden must be under a misimpression—the birds Mr. Browning referred to were Greypates, and he mentioned the heavy mortality to clinch his argument that the Goldfinch needed the extended protection which he advocated in his lecture. Personally he (Mr. Weston) agreed with Mr. Browning. Both the Goldfinch and the Bullfinch were very late breeders, and the present Act did not protect them late enough in the season. Hundreds of young Goldfinches (and Bullfinches, too) were caught practically as soon as they hopped out of the nest, and amongst these tender Greypates—some hardly able to feed themselves—the mortality was bound to be, and certainly was, very heavy. He had for years advocated the extension of the close season for Goldfinches until at least the end of September, and he knew that most, if not all, of his fellow members of the N.B.B. and M.C. in the room agreed with him in this. He saw no object in suppressing unpleasant truths; they should help to secure reforms in the law where such were really needed.

Mr. Ramsden, continuing, said that maybe Mr. Weston was right in saying the birds referred to were Greypates, but Mr. Browning certainly spoke of the losses as being 90 per cent., therefore his own statement was correct. If a league were formed he should be pleased to join. But bird-shops must be kept under proper conditions and cruelty must be put down. He agreed with Mr. Dawson that some dealers kept their establishments in a proper manner, but you could go elsewhere and see the opposite. This was not fair to the conscientious man, and it did bird-keeping great harm.

Mr. Dewhurst said he had recently had a talk with a lady who was a leading member of the Society for the Protection of Wild Birds, and she told him she was sure that that society would be pleased to receive the suggested deputation. That body was not against the bird-keeper, but was against the bird-shops, especially some of the London shops, and the bird-catchers.—Mr. Goodchild: They only want to stamp out the abuses.—Mr. Ramsden remarked that a certain Lord and Lady, very interested in bird-keeping, had told him the same, and they said further that they were astonished that the cage-bird societies in existence had taken no steps to uplift the Fancy by reforming the ways of dealers and catchers.—Mr. Trower said he had heard customers of his express the same opinion—they had said they would rather pay double for birds from a private source than go into a bird-shop.

Mr. Mortlock mentioned that he had had the pleasure of seeing some really humane catchers at work—once when he was down in Cornwall, where they had a portable folding "flight" into which all the hen Linnets, etc., caught were put, and when the catching was over these were released, and the "flight" packed up. This method did not interfere with the "catch."—Mr. Preston said he agreed that if there was cruelty it was better to speak up about it, and to get those responsible to mend their ways. That method was likely to bring about the desired improvement. There was no need to try to take away the living of people.

Mr. Dennithorne expressed a fear that the idea of licensing might develop into everyone having to pay a license for even keeping a bird, and that would be a great hardship to many thousands of working people.—Mr. Crabb said that from the remarks he had listened to, there seemed no doubt that the word "humane" was at the bottom of the trouble. But for the purposes of the hobby they must all hang together—bird-keeper, dealer, and catcher—for they were necessary one to the other. They must all act humanely, however, the catcher and dealer just as much as the person who keeps birds because he loves them, and who keeps them better even than they could possibly keep themselves if at liberty. The bird laws were getting stricter, and it seemed almost as though they had reached the position when it was possible for an officer to come up to you in the street if carrying a bird, question you about it, and finish up by inviting you to "come along with me." It was necessary to prove to these people that they as bird-keepers knew what they were doing, and could keep birds without any semblance of cruelty. They must combine to defend their own interests, and not only in London but all over the country. In his opinion the agitation would result in reasonable legislation and the improvement in the condition under which the birds were kept where they were not of the best at present.

A little further discussion followed, in which the point was raised that if catchers had to keep birds some weeks before being able to dispose of them in some areas (vide the Lord Chief Justice's recent decision), the price would increase, which would adversely affect the working man bird-keeper: some thought that an increase in the value of the birds might be a favourable factor, resulting in more care being taken of them by dealers, etc.—Then Mr. Cooper moved, Mr. Dewhurst seconded, and Mr. Trower supported, a resolution that a deputation from that meeting should be formed to wait upon the various societies (the R.S.P.C.A., etc.) concerned. This was unanimously carried, and on a vote the following gentlemen were elected to serve: Messrs. G. Crabb, J. Robson, A. Silver, and G. E. Weston, with the hon. solicitor (Mr. Nichols), the hon. treasurer (Mr. Trower), and one of the N.B.B. and M.C. secretaries (Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr).—Mr. Crabb said he would like to withdraw in favour of Mr. Dawson, sen., so that the bird trade might be represented; and to this the meeting agreed. The usual votes of thanks then brought this most successful gathering of fanciers to a close. A further meeting will be called to consider the report of the deputation when ready.

Several letters received dealing with this subject will be published next week.—Editor.

A HOLIDAY FREE OF COST.

Does it Appeal to You?

If the idea of a summer holiday free of cost appeals to you at all, then do not neglect the opportunity afforded by our latest competition, full particulars of which will be found on page 589 of this week's issue of Cage Birds. The conditions are very simple, and it is within the power of every reader to carry them out. The closing date is July 27th next, so that nearly a month yet remains in which to make an effort to secure the Ten Pounds (cash) first prize, or one of the seven other substantial cash prizes. And when helping yourself, get your friends to help you at the same time. That is the way to succeed. At the time of penning this reminder, the entries to hand are practically nil, so that it looks as though the money prizes are to be picked up by the expenditure of very little time and trouble on the part of competitors. So once again we would say that if the winning of Ten Pounds appeals to you, make a start at once towards securing this sum, which will defray for you the cost of a sojourn by the sea, or wheresoever your holiday fancy may lead you. Remember: there are eight cash prizes, and no fewer than 29 prizes all told! That the task of winning one or other of them presents little difficulty to those readers who "put their back into the work" during their spare time will be evident to all who read the rules and hints to intending competitors. Think of the pleasant holiday the possession of that Ten Pounds would enable you to spend. Make a start in the competition at once.

BIRMINGHAM, WOLVERHAMPTON & WEST BROMWICH INTER-SOCIETY COMPETITION.

Mr. Weaver (chairman of Wolverhampton C.B.S.), in his lecture to the members of the West Bromwich C.B.S. recently, reminded his hearers that he suggested the two societies enter into friendly competition to increase entries at each other's shows. He would very much like to see something done in this direction between the three sister societies, i.e., Birmingham, West Bromwich, and Wolverhampton. All three societies having agreed to an inter-club competition, Messrs. Weaver and Gibbons (Wolverhampton), Key, Andrews, and Jennings (West Bromwich), Mole, Pearce, and DeMaillet (Birmingham), attended a special meeting at the Dartmouth Hotel, West Bromwich, on June 18th, to draw up conditions, etc., Mr. Weaver being voted to the chair. The chairman said it gave him very great pleasure to preside, and he congratulated Mr. de Maillet upon the proposed scheme. The latter, in reply, said it really was Mr. A. Jones, of Birmingham C.B.S., who suggested the lines upon which the competition should be run, and that he had only followed up Mr. Jones' proposals. The following resolutions were carried:—By Mr. Key: "That a challenge cup be purchased at a cost not exceeding five guineas, same to be sterling silver, and each society to contribute one-third of its cost." Mr. Pease informed the meeting that he was a silversmith and had been offered a cup of at least 25ozs. weight for the above amount (the wholesale price being about seven guineas), while it was possible he might yet obtain even better terms. By Mr. Jennings: "That only the 20 highest awards gained by each society at each of the three open shows count for cup points, the lowest award counting one point and graduate upwards." Br. Mr. de Maillet: (1) "That as the inter-club competition is mainly to encourage the support of these societies at each other's shows, it is suggested that each society provide a special prize for the member gaining most points, with every award, at the three shows." (2) "That in the event of an exhibitor being a member of more than one of the three societies, points gained by them in cup competitions shall be equally divided between the societies of which he is a member, but total points gained shall count for the special prizes given by these societies for most points." (3) "That members' and selling classes be excluded from the competition." By Mr. Mole: "That cup must be won three times, not necessarily in succession, before becoming the property of the winning society." By Mr. Gibbons: "That cup be on view at each open show." By Mr. Andrews: "That the society holding the cup insure same for the ensuing twelve months." By Mr. Key: "That meeting be adjourned until July 16th, at Wolverhampton Society's headquarters, at 7 p.m., to enable the societies to discuss the matter with their members with a view of getting further suggestions for the competition conditions." Mr. de Maillet proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Weaver for his able services in the chair, which was carried; also a vote of thanks to Mr. de Maillet for the trouble he had taken in bringing the competition to this stage, with a request to continue to act as competition secretary. The meeting being over, the delegates settled down to a discussion over birdy topics, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.—J. H. De Maillet, Hon. Sec.

Murdoch, hon. sec. of the Airdrie and Coatbridge O.S.: For Scotch Fancies, Messrs. W. Hailstones (Edinburgh) and T. Todd (Glasgow); and for Norwich, Mr. A. Watson (Kilmarnock). Mr. R. Taylor (Preston) has kindly given to the Norwich Plainhead Club two gold medals (one for champions and one for amateurs), for best birds of opposite colour to the club's gold medal winners at Liverpool Club show, writes Mr. Jno. Hopkins. I shall be glad to hear from any Norwich fancier desirous of joining this club.

The annual outing of the Leicester Hand-in-Hand C.B.S., writes Mr. J. E. Wood, the hon. secretary, takes place on Sunday next (July 3) to Pailton. The train leaves G.C.R. station at 10.5 a.m. We extend a hearty invitation to all fanciers to visit our Nest Feather show, which will be held at the White Swan on July 2. The show will be opened at 3.30 p.m., admission free.

OBITUARY.

It is with deepest regret, writes Mr. W. Guthrie, sec. of the Kilmarnock O.C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the sad loss sustained by one of our oldest and most respected fanciers, Mr. James Johnstone, by the death of his wife, who passed away on June 9th after a long illness. I feel sure his friends, of whom there are very many, will join with us in sending our heartfelt sympathy to him and his family in this their sad bereavement.

Since my advertisement appeared in the last issue of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Bernard Hollins, the well-known Hull bird dealer, I have been unable to cope with the enquiries. Owing to the large number of applications for lists I have been unable to despatch all this week, but will forward same to all who have asked for them as quickly as possible.

I am trying to get another Linnet Singing Club, this time for the Manchester district, writes Mr. B. Wharton. There is nothing of this kind in Manchester, but there must be some Linnet fanciers about. I am a member of the Wigan Linnet Club, and they are always successful over there, and am sure it would be the same here if we could only get a start.

The members of the Ardwick and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. J. Spencer, the hon. secretary, are having a ramble through Wilmslow and district on Sunday, July 3. Mr. Snape, one of the members residing there, has promised to act as guide. Members please note that we meet the 2.30 train, London Road station. Local fanciers are invited to join us.

The sixth annual young bird show of the Wimbledon and Dis. C.B.S. will be held on July 4 at headquarters, 6, The Broadway. I cannot say at the time of writing what the entries will be like, writes Mr. H. Smith, the secretary, but in the past our young bird shows have been considered amongst the best held in and around London, and I am very sanguine that this year's will be no exception to the rule; indeed, I venture to think that competition will be very keen, particularly in the Yorkshire section.

In the next issue of "Boxing" (that remarkable weekly paper devoted to "the manly art"), on sale Wednesday, July 6, will be found a splendid special report, cabled from Nevada at enormous expense, of the greatest boxing contest of all time, the fight between Jeffries and Johnson for the world's heavy-weight championship. It will be a double number (price 2d.), and a coloured portrait of the winner of the stirring fight will be presented with every copy. Orders for this issue should be given newsagents at once.

To-day (Saturday, July 2), from 2 till 9 p.m., bird-lovers have the opportunity of viewing London's unrivalled collection of prospective champion Canaries and Hybrids, with British and foreign birds, at the City and Suburban Society's young bird show, the Church Institute, 60, Paddington Street, Marylebone. The favourites of every fancier can be seen, numbering over 180 birds. 'Buses to Baker Street, and the Baker Street (Metropolitan) and Regents Park (Bakerloo) railways are within five minutes' walk of the hall.—(ADVT.)

The second of the Bradford East O.S.'s Young Bird Shows will be held this Saturday, July 2, with Mr. J. Bailey (Allerton) as judge. The third will be held on July 23rd, judge Mr. H. W. Walsh (Halifax). The Old Bird Shows are due to be held on September 24th, November 15th, and December 26th. All the shows are to be held at the Park Chapel Schools, West Bowling. Leaflets giving the classification, rules, etc., may be had of the secretary, Mr. H. Hill, 15, Settle Terrace, Thornton Lane, Little Horton, Bradford.

The Queen's Park and Dis. C.B.A. young bird show was, I am pleased to say, a success, writes Mr. J. C. Birch, the secretary. The exhibits were an increase on last year's, in spite of the fact that a number of exhibiting members were unable to patronise the show in consequence of the poor breeding results. As usual the novice members filled their classes, and made a grand show. An amateur won the special for best bird in the show. We hope to make the show a financial success.

Mr. John Rukin, the noted Lizard Canary exhibitor, writes: "Please forward me a 22-lb. original tin of Ramsden's pure pepper. I may say that last season I had wonderful results again from the use of your pepper, which I consider the best on the market by far." And so say the majority of the leading exhibitors in the country. Ramsden's peppers are pure, sold with a full guarantee under the Food and Drugs Adulteration Act, also the Merchandise Act. Sold only in canisters, and full weight given. This is a point worth noting—full weight without the package. Ramsden's peppers are the finest the world produces, and in use prove to be far and away the cheapest. Insist on having Ramsden's.—(ADVT.)

Open Norwich Plainhead Club.

A meeting of the committee of the Open Norwich P.C. will be held on Saturday, July 2nd, at the Northgate Hotel, Top of Rawson Place, Bradford, at 5 p.m. Business very important. —O. MITCHELL, Hon. Sec.

Cinnamon-Marked Y.C.C.

Will any society desiring the patronage of the Cinnamon Marked Yorkshire Canary Club kindly apply, if they have not already done so, on or before July 7th, when patronage will be allotted?—GRAYSHON AND ALLEN, secretaries, Wormald Street, Flush, Heckmondwike.

National Green-Marked Y.C.C.

A committee meeting of the National Green Marked Yorkshire Canary Club will be held this Saturday (July 2nd) at 5 p.m. at the Market Tavern, Bradford. Business important: Tenders for Handbooks, allocation of part patronage, etc.—F. ARMSTRONG, Sec.

Our Essay Competition.

The papers sent in to compete for the £5 prize offered for the best essay entitled, "Is It Cruel to Keep Birds in Cages?" are very numerous. We are having their merits carefully adjudicated upon, and hope to be able to announce the winner in our next issue.

Midland Counties Y.C.C.

Secretaries of societies in the Midland Counties Yorkshire Canary Club's radius who desire its patronage, but have not yet applied for same, are reminded that their applications must be received by me at once, as the committee will meet to allot the patronage next week. I take this opportunity of reminding local societies that clubs having our patronage last year had a most successful and paying section, and entries promise to be numerically superior during the coming show season. I shall be glad to hear from our members (for publication in the Press) what sort of luck they have had, and the number of young they have reared this breeding season.—A. PADDOCK, All Saint's Road, Kings Heath, Birmingham.

The "P.I.P."

Readers who appreciate a splendidly illustrated, thoroughly "live" and interesting weekly journal, should tell their newsagents to supply them with a copy of the "Penny Illustrated Paper." This old-established and favourite periodical has just passed into new ownership, and the present proprietors have added many valuable features and improved it to such an extent that the "Penny Illustrated Paper" bids fair to eclipse all contemporaries and achieve a record circulation—for variety of contents, topical photographic and other illustrations, and bright literary matter, a more attractive weekly paper for the home cannot well be imagined. Readers should invest a "humble penny" in a copy and see for themselves.

A Lord Mayor's Trophy.

The first Lord Mayor of the ancient city of Norwich, Dr. E. E. Blyth, LL.D., has generously promised, we are informed, a handsome silver cup to the Norwich Amateur Cage Bird Association. The cup is now being manufactured by Messrs. Allen and Daws (Norwich), at whose shop it will shortly be on view. The stipulations made by his Lordship are that the cup shall be competed for at the autumn cage bird show of the society by the various local cage bird societies in the city, each club winning it to be entitled to have the name of such club engraved thereon. He further suggested that the cup should be called the "Lord Mayor's Cup," and should remain the property of the N.A.C.B.S., and that the winning club should return the cup a week previous to the annual show. His Lordship expressed the hope that the gift would stimulate the important pastime of Canary breeding, with which Norwich had been so long associated.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

The Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

A class of genuine Belgians would attract visitors who otherwise would not look in at the show, and to those specially interested Belgians are a treat. We hear a great deal about shows going down. Probe the matter to the bottom, and I think it will be found that one of the causes is the want of a higher ideal concerning the exhibits that are entered for competition. The committee at a show should be composed of experts who are able to speak authoritatively, and guide the business of the show. Judges would then submit doubtful points to such a body, and instead of having an entry of inferior exhibits, shows would be supported with the real exhibit all through. Under such a regime Scotch Fanciers would have little or no difficulty in getting the genuine Belgian for breeding purposes, and through that medium the standard of the Scotch Fancy Canary would be improved. I know it is impossible to give absolute satisfaction, but much can be accomplished by ornithological associations in the way of bringing about a pleasanter feeling in the working and visiting of shows.

From what I know of Scotchmen I am persuaded they will not rest contented until they have large, massive Belgians to exhibit and to breed from, for the purposes of building up the Scotch Fancy Canary. As each year goes by, we should have a steady improvement all over, and no falling away.

"Regaining" the Belgian.

The real stamp of Belgian has been lost, and the point for consideration is how is the Belgian to be regained. The nearest approach to the Belgian is the Scotch Fancy Canary of the past half century. This had to depend upon the Belgian for the putting in or maintaining of the "hump" or "shoulder." Whenever a breeder observed his stock tending to be plain or flat in the back or shoulder he waited patiently for the two or three gentlemen who annually visited Antwerp and brought back the pick of the season's breeding of Belgian Canaries. Canary breeders in those palmy days, if they were to have the privilege of purchasing the best of the consignment, had to keep on good terms with the Belgian Canary dealers.

At one time the price of the Belgian was moderate and within the reach of the ordinary breeder. I recollect that one of the finest yellow cocks of the Belgian race that I ever had the pleasure of admiring only cost three pounds. He was bought by a well-known breeder in Dumbarton, who was a carpenter by trade and in the course of his ordinary calling had occasion to visit Antwerp. It was then by chance that he met this breeder, a gardener, who bred a few pairs for pleasure but took a special delight in having quality. That bird produced some splendid first-crosses from which prize winners descended. That Belgian only cost three pounds. Looking back there was little wonder the purchaser felt proud of his bargain. By-and-bye prices advanced, until a Belgian was placed beyond the ownership of a working-man, or even a successful middle-class merchant.

The worst calamity of all was the deterioration of the Belgian Canary. It gradually receded in size, presumably through having been cross-bred with inferior Scotch Fancy Canaries, until a really good Belgian Canary could not be procured for even a princely price.

An Absolute Necessity.

Large "hump" is an absolute necessity in the breeding of the Scotch Fancy if the erect posture and prominent "hump" are to be maintained. Scotch Fancy breeders have no faith in what is put before the public as the Belgian, and are now face to face with a serious difficulty in breeding. How the defect is to be remedied, is the problem of the hour.

I have given the subject a deal of thought, and have come to the conclusion that the only way out of the difficulty is to match the Scotch Fancy Canary erect in posture with the most prominent "hump" that can be procured, with a mate that is, if possible, more pronounced in "hump" qualities, with the ostensible object of building up a strain of heavy-shouldered Canaries that will equal or surpass the Belgian Canary of the old days. An odd Scotch Fancy is to be met with here and there with the properties indicated, but it is well nigh impossible to expect to come across a male and a female in the same room that would be suitable to put up to obtain the desired result; indeed, it will be a most difficult thing to get a pair anywhere.

If a keen fancier possessed of a Scotch Fancy Canary of outstanding "hump" would enter the arena heartily, get a suitable match, stronger than his own in the "lacking" points, and breed them to secure prominent shoulders, he would confer a great benefit upon the Fancy and would reap a rich reward. The progeny of such a cross would command handsome prices. Breeders are eager for stock such as I have indicted, not only in Scotland and in Britain, but in the colonies.

Depth of chest is of paramount importance, so that in any selection which may be made to redeem the Belgian Canary both birds should have a great depth of chest from the tip of the shoulder to the front of the chest. This quality cannot be dispensed with and should be a chief consideration.

I have endeavoured to emphasise the need for size. The situation demands it. What is wanted more than ever is plenty of size to develop a fine massive type of Scotch Fancy Canary. A lot has been said, and it is repeated every day, to the effect that the Scotch Fancy Canary is on the decline. There is a justification for that cry, but too much is made of it. If in place of repeating that breeders would set about to increase the size with a good instalment of the Belgian properties, we would soon see the Scotch Fancy Canary on the upward grade, and it would grow in popularity wherever the correct type is found.

Other Necessary Qualities.

The head should be small and neat, and the neck should be long and free. The favourite Belgian as it was had a fine reachy neck and a neat head, and in the restoration we are speaking about these fine features should not be lost sight of, but should be specially instilled. A clean, well-cut-out front is an essential element to help intensify a nice front in the future members of the Scotch Fancy Canary. Every breeder likes his birds to have a front equal to a front which might be expected by the use of a keenly set spokeshave on a piece of wood.

The body should be as long and as deep as possible to lengthen the young. Short stumpy bodies should be steered clear of, and the only way to steer clear of this objection is to have in every direction as much length of side or body as can be put in.

The old Belgian was finely tapered in the body towards the tail. I think that should be aimed at, as the breeding of two birds that are well made down towards the tail in the Scotch Fancy Canary style is apt to produce a cross or Scotch Fancy Canary of pretty much the same thickness throughout the body, which detracts from the smart appearance which is obtainable from the tapered type. The body should be straight. The posture should be erect; the bird set on legs that, when it is run into a one-perch cage, will take a firm grip and command a determined, erect position. The progeny require to be erect, with no inclination towards hanging over the perch.

The tail should be perpendicular with the body and perch. That was a characteristic of the favourite Belgian, and should be kept in view in breeding for the future Belgian "King of the Fancy."

Plenty of patience will be needed, as it will be uphill work to retrieve what has been lost. More, in fact, than we can imagine has been lost, and it will take a long time to make up lee-way. But the attempt is worthy of the best efforts of our best fanciers not only in the direction of restoring the Belgian Canary, but of perpetuating a splendid type of the Scotch Fancy Canary, which is admired and followed with interest wherever the English language is spoken. Every breeder by building up the prominent shoulder can do something in this restoration process, and I hope that what has been said on the subject will stimulate breeders in general to breed the correct type. In doing so they will confer a benefit upon other fanciers and future generations of fanciers.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

By R. W. VANDERBEN (South Shields).

When Feeding Britishers.

Again it would be waste of space to try to describe the diets for all British birds, and I would only endeavour to indicate how suitable variety in their food may be obtained. Our ever obliging friend, CAGE BIRDS, will give any special information (and here I would wish to thank those courteous and painstaking gentlemen who answer queries in this paper, for information given; indeed, in reply to others, but which has been of great use to me). Read carefully the answers to correspondents, and you will reap much knowledge and save much repetition.

In feeding remember that the wild bird works hard for his food, while his caged brother has only to eat it, and it is best to avoid the danger of overfeeding on oily seeds, or on foods rich in nitrogenous elements. Most of the seed mixtures sold are too rich, and can well be diluted with half their bulk of good Canary seed, or even more while insects or other rich foods are being given.

It will be of much interest to yourself and benefit to your pet to observe or read up about his natural habits and haunts; they are an infallible guide as to what is his best food. If inconvenient you need not of necessity give identical food; intelligent thought will often suggest easily obtained equivalents, or even improvements for caged birds. The seeds we give our birds are not wholly those they get in nature. Various insects, alive or dried, meat, cheese, and fruit (fresh or dried) may take the place of their natural provender. The Thrush tribe fed on a stock food of puppy meal, mixed with fruit and cereal meals, compare well with their wild brothers for condition, and are in song for a longer period of the year.

For these birds great cleanliness is necessary, or they get a sour smell. I clean mine every day. They and all insect-eaters are fond of house flies, or any beetles, spiders, etc., which may be obtainable. I have tried often to see if I could tire out my Blackbird and Chaffinch—I catching flies and they eating them—but they always win.

Pets that are Easily Kept.

Any of the small British Finches are good pets and easily kept. The Bullfinch and Goldfinch are my favourites. The former, by haunting gardens, hedgerows, and coppices, will indicate that he is a feeder on buds, berries, and seeds. The latter and Linnets haunt wild open spaces where weeds abound, especially their favourite thistle, hardhead (Scabius) and teazle. They are seed-eaters. A cage with an open flat wire roof, containing two or three Goldfinches, is a lasting joy. These beautiful little creatures will spend hours in interesting gymnastic exercises on that roof, seeming to prefer to be inverted, and impartial whether hanging by one leg or both. The Greenfinch and Chaffinch are fairly ubiquitous, and, as one might suppose, fairly impartial feeders. The latter, whose Norwegian or German name interpreted is the "Beech Finch," feeds in autumn largely on beech-mast.

The kernels of Barcelona nuts, or apple pips, seem to please him just as much. When apples are being prepared for cooking I always impound the cores for my Chaffinch. If these be fixed firmly in his cage he will struggle with them till his cage rattles, gaining much beneficial exercise and eventually the pips. For the fruit he cares little. With his beautiful though subdued colouring and glorious sheen he is a pretty sight, hopping about on the table, snatching at a sheet of notepaper as I write, or tearing bits from the edge of my newspaper.

All Fond of Them.

All the small British Finches (and Canaries) are fond of flowering or seeding grasses of any sort, and a bunch of them gives the birds exercise and something to play with. Chaffinches are fond of insects and you can meet their needs in winter in this respect with ants' eggs and dried flies, they will eat them mixed dry with their usual seeds. Be careful about introducing this bird to others. He has a business-like beak, backed by a sturdy frame, and knows how to use them.

Two Acrobats.

I caught one winter two Great Tits, in a trap cage baited with suet, and though at first I knew little of their food, I soon found out. That they liked suet was obvious, and it was equally obvious that as a continuous diet in a cage it must soon upset their livers. But the shrewd nips they gave me when I took them from the trap (anyone who has put their finger in even a Tomtit's nest with the bird at home will know they have a most efficient though small weapon at their front end), convinced me that if they liked it, no ordinary seed would be too hard for them. I give a mixture of the stock seeds, and they ate all of them. Their peculiar Woodpecker-like habits led me to try them with mealworms and any insects I could get. They seemed unable to bear the sight of them, for they put them out of sight as soon as possible. They were most interesting and amenable pets, and outdid my Goldfinches in cage roof acrobatics. I got to love them so well that when the spring came I put the cage, door open, in the garden. Either they did not appreciate my hospitality as I appreciated theirs, or the fields offered a more pleasing attraction. They uttered no thanks, and they never returned.

For those who wish to try the unusual, I should say that success may be met by attending to the general essentials given, and finding by observation of haunts and habits, proper food, if not just as in Nature, at least by trial and thought an efficient substitute. Even in open spaces and parks in our towns, much bird lore is to be obtained by the observer, and our public libraries are always open to the enquirer. If the bird you desire be cageable at all, I believe that commonsense and thought will bring such success as to satisfy even the heart of an amateur.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The Breeding of the Exhibition Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire.

By D. MALLINSON & SON.

A Lecture read before the Halifax O.S. on June 4.

Many changes have taken place in the bird Fancy since I began to breed Canaries, over half a century ago. There was no colour feeding of birds, till the seventies, when Mr. Bemrose brought out his red-coloured Norwich, which carried all before them. Many times these birds were tested for dye, but none could be found. If they had been dyed the flight feathers would have been the same colour underneath as they were on the outside, but with the hottest fed birds they are pale on the under side of the flight feathers. Mr. Bemrose would not divulge his secret till after the Crystal Palace Show—he had a whole season to himself; then he told the Fancy it was common hot cayenne pepper given to the birds throughout the moult, he feeding them with a regular quantity every day.

Colour feeding has ever since been a common practice amongst bird fanciers, especially those who go in for exhibiting birds. One of the worst ideas was when we had to feed for yellow fed, and not get them red. Turmeric, Mustard and many sorts of spices were used to temper down the red cayenne, and many a good bird that would take colour (whether really red-fed or not) was thrown out for being red-fed by some judges, whilst others would pass them alright.

The greatest difficulty was to tell where yellow ended and the red began. This caused great disatisfaction amongst exhibitors, and it was decided to leave colour open—the best way out—and to give as few points as possible for colour.

Lively Scenes.

Bird shows used to be held on Sundays, they always being held at a public house. There were some lively scenes at that time, as borrowing was a common practice. One man would borrow a team of six or twelve to win a special. This got too prevalent. Therefore, societies made a rule binding birds to be the bona fide property of the exhibitor Various specialist clubs and unions have all been-developed during the period of fifty years. The casting aside of the Yorkshire self Cinnamon is a feature I regret, as it was a beautiful bird, and one to be admired when in good condition. Thousands of these birds were bred, and very much valued. Now they are cast on one side; the dealers will scarcely look at them.

Yorkshire greens seem to be as much thought of as their brother Cinnamons are thrown adrift. Very few fanciers to-day have seen a good Yorkshire Cinnamon. Those that are seen nowadays are only sports from the marked variety. A true bred Yorkshire Cinnamon has that deep shade of cinnamon, often enough seen in a good Norwich Cinnamon. Those that are bred to-day are mostly light dun in colour owing to the breeding for light marked birds. The Yorkshire Cinnamon was the bird I got all my cinnamon marks from originally with an occasional dip into green.

A Good Bird.

The first bird I bought was a yellow Yorkshire hen—a quarter bred Belgian. I gave 6s. for her; that was a very high price, being in the year 1859. I could have bought scores of Canary hens at one shilling each, but I wanted something good so I had to pay for it. Although I had bought this hen I had no cock bird to pair with her, but I knew where I could have one for the asking. I had two uncles, both Canary breeders. One of them had a nice green-marked cock, almost even marked, bred from a Cinnamon Yorkshire cock. I borrowed this bird to pair with her and got eight youngsters, both green-marked and cinnamon marked. All the cinnamon marked birds were hens; one of them was even marked, a fine drawn hen, showing breed well up on leg, a good young hen, one that would bear looking at to-day without one's being ashamed of it.

I put her on the top row on purpose for keeping her along with a few others, but I had not to let her stop long. We used to sell all our surplus stock to a man named John Lees, who used to fetch them about the last week in September. His price was 2s. 6d. per pair for them, cocks and hens. He looked round for all decent Yorkshire birds touched nicely with the Belgian.

John soon spotted the even-marked yellow hen, and, of course, wanted her. I told him she was for breeding with. But, he said, surely you could spare her, and keep another one instead? I told him I intended keeping her as she was the best bird I had—such lovely eye markings and perfect wings. John would not be shaken off so easily; so he told me he would leave the lot unless this hen was placed amongst the sale birds. I hesitated about this. Two and sixpence a pair was not enough for a hen like this, as I knew she was a better hen than the mother, as she was perfectly marked, and as good every way. I knew of no other bird dealer who would buy them, and I was paying sixpence per pound for canary seed, so I consented to let her go with the others at the record price of half a-crown per pair.

Had I a bird like her now she would sell for what he paid for the fifteen pairs for a stock bird alone. She may be a trifle breedy now for a show bird, but at that day a Yorkshire showed breed to a large extent. Winners were about quarter-bred, I should call them. For years I bred these cinnamon-marked Yorkshires, generally using a self cinnamon cock to a clear hen, and sold them at 2s. 6d. a pair. It was a mere fancy for me—I always lost money by them as canary seed was so expensive, and you could get little for the birds when they were bred. Only those men who were showing were able to get any good prices for a Canary.

I got to know of old John Smith, of Halifax, in a year or two, and he gave me 3s. 6d. per pair for them on the first Saturday in November. I sold old John hundreds of birds at this price. I do not remember ever getting more than 5s. 6d. a pair for them. That was later on, when there were more dealers in the field wanting them. He had to give a trifle more then.

A Great Drawback.

The great drawback to the old rule of breeding for marked birds was the large percentage of fouls you bred. You may get one decent nest out of a dozen, but generally out of a nest of four there would be one approaching evenness—the others most likely selfs, with, perhaps, an odd clear. I may say I have bred more even-marked birds this way, and seen scores that have been got this way, than I have bred since I began to cultivate the marked breeding, avoiding the self cinnamon as much as possible.

The splitting of the dark to the light worked out the same as it does in Mule breeding; those birds that took to both parents moderately were left with eyes, wings, and sometimes a tail feather or two marked. I do not advise this method of breeding for markings, and I cast it aside over twenty years since, as I found I got no nearer, always having so many fouls to contend with.

It would be some twenty years since the Yorkshire Union included the cinnamon-marked Yorkshire as an established Yorkshire bird. Societies then began to make classes for it; some made only one, others made two. I was not an exhibitor this time, although a member of Huddersfield Society. I sold a lot of good cinnamon-marked birds that won at the commencement of classes being provided for them. One of the best yellow cinnamon-marked cocks I ever bred I sold for six shillings. I never asked any big price for the birds, and if I got a trifle more than the dealer would give, I was satisfied. Up to the time of my beginning to exhibit birds, I never sold one for ten shillings.

I may venture to say there is no fancier to-day who has studied the various methods and systems of producing this bird more than I have. In my opinion, it is the most difficult of birds to breed not a very delicate bird to rear like the Belgian or Crest, but the difficulties to be contended with are innumerable. First you have to get the markings on to the right bird. "My word, if it had been a nicely marked bird, instead of a tick," or, on the other hand, "Had it not been splashed on the back or a scar across the chest, it would have ben an eye-opener." The breeders of Clears and Greenticked birds have nothing but butter and milk to contend with compared with a breeder of markings. He can always stick more closely to type and quality, than a cinnamon-marked breeder will ever be able to do. The marked breeder has got to study his birds well, and pair those he thinks will obtain good type and quality, and not lose any percentage in markings. This is the great difficulty, and where the skill of the breeder is tested. For, however careful one may be in breeding, the objectionable foul bird will keep appearing, and most likely the best bird in the nest for type, the markings, of course, being against it. A nest of clears may be the first nest from a well-mated pair; the second nest may be all fairly good marked birds; whilst the third nest may be on the heavy side. All three above-named variations can come in one season from one pair of birds. The best marked birds are generally on the small side, or have bad position, or there is something wrong with them to disqualify them for showing.

THE ONLY "TRAMP" BIRD-SELLER.

A Roadside Chat.

A reader who has been on a holiday walking tour recently, sends us the following account of an unexpected meeting he had with a curious character, who described himself as the "only tramp bird-seller in England."—EDITOR.

A stall, made up of what appeared to be an old door, fastened on to a hand-cart, stood by the side of the road between Market Harborough and Northampton, and piled up on the stall were a number of small cages, each containing a Canary. The proprietor, pipe in mouth, and his wife (also "blowing a cloud") were seated on the bank enjoying a rest.

He was a bird-seller, he told me, after I had sat down in the shade near by, and we had drifted into conversation: "the only roadster (tramp) bird-seller in England, but trade is bad just now."

"Dreadful bad," said the woman, breaking in to the conversation. "Why, we had to rough it (sleep out) last night. You see," she added, "they won't take us into a casual ward because the birds mean value in money; but if you are doing no trade, you have no money."

Their clientele consisted of cottagers and country beerhouse keepers, and the common lodging-house proprietors

"Every common lodging-house has a bird in a cage in the kitchen," said the man; "it makes the place look homely." Unfortunately he had found none of these establishments on the road they had been travelling over in need of replenishing just now.

"I've give birds away," said the man, "when we've had a bad day, and it's getting towards night. I've taken a 'bob' for one, and if anybody can tell me where I can buy Canaries at a 'bob' a time, I'll thank them. Last night we couldn't even get that."

He obtained his birds from breeders who knew him. He was well-known on the roads, and generally managed to make enough in the summer to give him a few pounds to start the winter with; but he was just commencing his summer rounds, and had not been able, so far, to put anything by to tide him over a blank day. He had several expenses to put up with. For instance, it cost him 6d. extra a night, which he paid the deputy in the lodging-house they stayed at, to take charge of the birds at bed time.

I found this man had the utmost contempt for the rest of the bird world. "I only sell Canaries," he said. "We never have sold nothing else," said his wife, her vehemence outbalancing her grammar.

They only did business on the roads. "The police bothers one in town if you're a stranger," said the man; "but I've sold birds to many a country policeman before to-day."

He and his wife made their own cages. They rested in a lodging-house for a day or so when the stock was running low, and made a supply whilst awaiting the arrival of a fresh lot of Canaries.

I asked him what was the best day he ever had, and was surprised to hear it was when a motorist ran into his cart last year, and strewed the cages on the road. The gentleman in the car gave him £2 as a solatium for his wounded feelings, and to repair the damage; the latter he found amounted to the loss of two birds.

The worst day he ever had was when a deputy in a lodging-house locked the cages up in the kitchen, and the gas escaped during the night, and all the birds were found dead in the morning. He could not get a penny as damages.

"It's an up and down world," he said, as I rose to my feet to continue my journey; "but we manage to pull through, somehow or other." Then I wished them good day; and we parted.

ASHTON-U.-LYNE & DIST. O.S.

Monthly meeting held June 7th, Mr. Foxall in the chair. This meeting was thrown open as a "question night." There was a large attendanee, and a good number of questions were asked; these were ably answered by some of our elder members. It was agreed to hold a number of table shows for young birds, the first to be held at our next meeting, July 5th. For Norwich there will be two classes. The above will be judged by Mr. Sharples (Oldham), and all points gained will count for specials, there being nine already promised.—H. FODEN, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN LIZARD CLUB.

Monthly meeting held June 25th in the Fawcett-street Cafe. There was a good turn-out of members, Mr. Jeffrey being voted to the chair. The secretary read correspondence re our patronage, and considerable satisfaction was expressed at the fact that we have classes at Newcastle and Gateshead shows. A long and pleasant discussion ensued on the standard as business was soon over, and Mr. Reid moved, seconded by Mr. Jeffrey, "That we adopt the standard of the Lancashire and Lizard F.A." Will members note that subs. are now due? Anyone wishing to join can have particulars from me.—G. DAVIDSON, Sec., 10, The Royalty, Sunderland.

One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each coupon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons, which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1s. for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 595

FALKIRK (Good Intent) C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held in the Oddfellows' Hall on June 25th, Mr. Hunter presiding. Five new members were enrolled, which brings the total up to 45, which is very encouraging. Being a new association, and having only a 10 mile radius, it has had the whole-hearted support of the fanciers. Members please note next meeting July 30th.—W. CLUBB, Sec.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB

Usual monthly meeting held at 122, Ingram-street, June 25th, Mr. Marlin presiding over a good attendance. For the first feather show, to be held on the last Saturday of July (admission free), Mr. Pettigrew was almost unanimously appointed to judge. Classes: Norwich, clear or ticked yellow, cock or hen; ditto buff; variegated yellow, cock or hen; ditto buff; Border, yellow or buff, cock or hen; A.O.V. Border, A.O.V. Canary, A.V. Mule or Hybrid. Specials for the show were handed in by Messrs. Fulton, Small, Connelly, Knox, Marlin, Munro, and Pettigrew. Our monthly show was then proceeded with.—T. DRYSDALE, Sec.

STRATFORD & E. LONDON F.S

Members not present at last meeting are requested to note that the evening show of pigeons and cage birds on July 14th has been altered to a general show, to include all sections. Mr. C. A. House will judge. It was also resolved to call a special general meeting for July 28th, to make arrangements for the young stock show, October 26th. It is hoped all members will endeavour to attend. The balance-sheets of last two monthly shows were brought forward by the hon. sec., and were very satisfactory, the poultry show having a profit of 3s. 10d., and the rabbit, etc., show 17s. profit. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. A. Waters for kindness in judging. Miss G. E. Jay having won the points' cup outright, and returned same to the society for competition, it was unanimously resolved that the best thanks of the society be accorded Miss Jay, and that the society's silver medal be presented to her to commemorate the event. New members elected: Mr. C. Hodder (Forest Gate), Mr. C. H. Ives (Romford), Mr. T. Gowers (Leyton Road), and Mr. J. S. Jackson (Tottenham). All points' medals have been posted to the winners.—W. MANEY, Hon. Sec.

MID-RHONDDA AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held at headquarters, Davis's Temperance Bar, Tonypandy, on June 25th, when we had a grand meeting. I am pleased to say we had six new members and a vice-president added to our roll. Will it be too much to ask every member to be present at our next meeting and bring a new member? We have several more who have promised to join us. Mr. T. H. Melhuish, of Cardiff, was appointed to judge our show on November 10th. I shall be pleased to hear from any fancier in the district wishing to join.—G. YEO, Hon. Sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

Adjourned meeting held on June 16th, Mr. J. Curry in the chair. The details regarding the annual outing were settled. The meeting proceeded with the classes for open show. The entrance fee and prizes remain as last year, namely, 20s. per class, no cancelling and no amalgamation. The Norwich classes stand as last year, with the addition of an extra unflighted hen class. The greens stand if we get Green C.A. patronage; otherwise they drop out. Cinnamons are left in the hands of the committee. Crests are left as last year, but the pair class is dropped, and clear body dark crests included with the yellows and clear or grey crests. A long discussion took place over the Crest section, as we would have liked to apply for the Crested C.C. patronage; but it was felt that certain classes insisted on by the club would fail to fill, and by taking up the guarantee scheme we would still be out of pocket more than if we stuck to our old classification. The Yorkshires are left as last year, with four extra classes added for green marks, according to the Norwich Green Marked Y.C.C. requirements, whose patronage has been granted us. Scotch Fancy and Borders remain as last year. Two classes are added for Lizards, and the selling classes were modified slightly. Mules, British and Foreign remain as last year. Mr. J. Thompson was elected a member.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Sec.

CANARY QUERIES.

Not Singing and Moulting.

Miss Wedgwood.—It would have been a help had you said how the bird was fed, and where kept. If it is hung in a window, or in any draughty or greatly fluctuating position, you must first of all remove to a comfortable position, quite free from draughts, and where the temperature is as equable as possible. At the same time see that it is not exposed to the fumes of burning lights in the evenings, and that it is well ventilated. Next examine its cage, and all the joints and crevices, for traces of insect pests, and if any are discovered, see they are quite eradicated. Feed on a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as a staple. Every second day for a fortnight give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with gold of pleasure seed. On the alternate days give a quarter of a teaspoonful of maw seed. Every day give a fair supply of crisp, young chickweed. Limit the diet to this for a fortnight. In the drinking water give ten drops of syrup of buckthorn for two days, and after that give four drops each of tincture of calumba, tincture of gentian, and aromatic sulphuric acid in the water every second day for a week. Allow the bird to bathe freely, and stick a small cube of hard, common salt in the wires for it to peck at for a time.

Bare and Bleeding.

B.W.—If all the trouble occurred after you returned the cock to the common hen, I am inclined to think she was the real cause of it by plucking out his feathers to make a lining for another nest. Even if you did not see this happen, you would probably discover the feathers in the nest pan. In this case your best way out of the difficulty would be to supply hair and a few small pigeon or poultry feathers to make the nest, and if this is not quite successful, remove the cock and only allow them to be together for two or three hours each day until the eggs are laid; then keep him away altogether. It would have been best not to allow the hen to nest again, seeing that she has already had three nests. If you are convinced this suggestion is not the source of the trouble, then it is practically certain to be due to red mite attacks; scraping out the joints of the door and any likely crack or crevice with a pin on to a sheet of white paper, and you will doubtless soon see the cause. In that case, give all the joints and crevices, and perch ends a dressing with essence of quassia until the birds can be removed to overhaul thoroughly. Give a bath with a few drops of the quassia in it every third day for a week or two. Slightly anoint the bare places with zinc ointment once or twice. Give twelve drops of glycerine, ten of lemon juice, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence for three days. Give a fair supply of green food daily.

Not Weaning.

T. H.—You must make a stronger effort to get your young birds on to seed. It is rather unusual that they should ignore seed so long if the latter is of good sound quality. Examine the seed carefully, and chew a pinch of it, to see if it is quite sound and free from mustiness. Having satisfied yourself that the seed is not at fault, put the birds on the following treatment: Give an unlimited supply of plain canary seed in the hopper. Every day give two good teaspoonfuls of summer rape—the reddish, mild, and nutty sort—for the six birds in a separate vessel, and each day for the next week add a piece of bread and milk the size of a large walnut, sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed. Every second day only give three small teaspoonfuls of cracked hemp for the six birds, and gradually reduce this quantity by about one-third, and give only twice a week after the first week. You may give a half-ripe plantain stalk daily, and after the first week go on to a spray of seedy chickweed, seedy stalks of shepherd's purse, nasturtium, or marigold or dandelion blooms, and so on to the usual forms of green food three or four times a week. After the first week also stop the bread and milk, and go back to egg food, but give it only every second day, and do not make it moist or sloppy. Keep it rather on the dry side. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece for one day, and for the next three or four days add three drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of calumba to the water last thing at night, and throw this out and give fresh pure water at midday each following day.

Not Nesting.

Novice Crest.—Sorry the hen has not made an attempt to nest yet. You may, I think, safely wipe her off the active list of breeders, for this season, at any rate. Still, you will lose nothing by leaving the pair together permanently for the rest of the season then if she surprises you by going to nest at the last minute, so to speak, all will be well. But if she does not do so I should, were it a case of my own, discard her altogether for the future. My experience is that nothing but disappointed hopes is to be got out of them. Continue to feed and treat as mentioned in last reply for the latter part of treatment. For green food you may try the effect of giving seedy sprays of chickweed, speedwell, and pumpernel each day. The moult may begin any time now among birds that have not been mated, or those which have been mated and not gone to nest. It is the safest plan to begin at once to give a little colour food twice a week to those birds that have to be fed, and increase this to three times a week with colour food at half strength about the middle of the month. This will suffice until the birds begin to cast feathers. As soon as you find a few small feathers or a wing or tail feather in the cage, then begin to give the colour food daily and gradually increase it to full strength. Birds that are healthy and in good condition do not need helping through the moult, beyond protecting from draughts and stuffy atmosphere, and feeding liberally and allowing free access to baths. When being colour fed, the necessary egg food is quite sufficient extra feeding, and the staple diet should be limited to plain canary seed. During latter half of moult, give twenty drops of chemical food in the water three times a week.

Brevities.

Canary Ill (W.F.W.)—The bird is in a serious condition. Take it indoors, and keep it in a warm, cosy position, not too near the fire, but yet on the warm side, and where the temperature will be as equable as possible night and day. For the staple seed diet give plain canary seed only, and each day give a small piece of bread scalded in milk and sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed. For three or four hours each day give water made faintly saline with Epsom salts, and for the rest of the time two days in every three add twenty drops of the following mixture to each ounce of its drinking water. Mixture: Get a chemist to dispense you a little mixture, say an ounce, composed of two parts each glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and one part each tincture of lobelia, and ipecacuanha wine; add to each ounce of mixture ten grains of potassium iodide. Give in the drinking water as above directed until better, and afterwards every second day until well. The sample of seed is unsuitable, and some of it quite bad. You will do well to get a better mixture of good, sound seeds.

Three Points (N. K. J.).—(1) If the hen is anxious to go to nest, it will be quite possible for you to get another brood. But if she shows no particular desire to begin nesting right away it is extremely doubtful getting another brood off her this year. Of course, you may leave the pair together a little longer "on spec." (2) It is best to transfer the young to the nursery cage a few days after they leave the nest altogether—say, about three weeks or a month old. The exact age would depend upon how soon they left the nest. If the parents start nesting again and maltreat them, it may be advisable to place them in the nursery, nest and all, before they are quite able to leave the nest. But this plan is only to meet cases where the hen plucks the young to line her second nest. (3) As a general rule all breeding pairs should be broken up as opportunities occur, from the end of June to the end of July. As regards the latest month possible for breeding there is none. Young have been hatched and reared in December, and in every month throughout the year. These, however, are the exceptions, and not to be taken as a reliable guide. For this purpose, the time mentioned above is correct.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Canary Unwell ((Manx).—You certainly would not be justified in breeding with this bird, which is in a very bad way, and will probably never do any more good. You might try what the following treatment will do for it, but the prospects of cure, I candidly admit, are exceedingly small: First see the cage is quite free from red mites, and is quite out of the way of cold draughts. Keep in a fairly equable temperature, but not exposed to fumes from burning lights in the evenings. Keep cage floor and perches scrupulously clean, and the former well strewn with gritty sand. Give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as a staple, twice a week a small piece of bread and milk, sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed, and on two other days a half-teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niga, black rape, teazle, and millet. Give a spray of chickweed or other green stuff daily. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and six drops of syrup of rhubarb every second day for a week, and after that give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid daily for three days. Finally, give twenty drops of whisky, and five each of oxymel of squills, paregoric, and tincture of lobelia every second day for a week, then miss a week, and repeat for another week.

Bad Foot (F. J. Whibley).—It is impossible to state the cause without knowing the exact condition under which bird is kept. To my mind, it seems more than likely the cause of the trouble lies in the cage, and the repeated occurrences are due to the same cause. Examine cage thoroughly, and see if there is any jagged end of wire, or metal, or sharp edge of glass which can be the cause of slight injury by the bird jumping upon or flying against it. If it clings to the edge of the glass sides, carefully examine the edge of the glasses, and if the cutting edges are not removed, lift out the glasses and carefully rub down the edges to smoothness on a hard sandstone or an old file. With a very little care this is quite a simple job. Keep cage and perches absolutely clean, and the floor strewn with clean gritty sand. If the foot is now sore, bathe if for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid—small teaspoonful of acid to rather less than a teacupful of warm water. After bathing, dry gently, and anoint once a day with a little zinc ointment. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice every second day for a week.

Not Nesting (Scot).—It is just possible the hen, or perhaps both birds, may have been played out the first two seasons. It is doubtful if they will do anything more now this season. Leave them together, however, and in addition to the usual seed diet give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, sprinkled with soft sugar and maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give a teaspoonful of crushed stale sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with a mixture of equal parts gold of pleasure and sesame seed. Give a few dandelion heads daily, instead of green food. In the drinking water dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea for two days, and afterwards give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel every second day for a week.

Young Dying (Egroeg).—Your feeding is wrong, and is doubtless the cause of your loss. You make hemp, are sound and sweet. Stop the soaked canary and cracked hemp; the former would have been far better omitted. First, see your seeds, especially the hemp, are round and sweet. Stop the soaked canary at once, and substitute in its stead a regular supply of dry, good, sound canary. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of summer rape, selecting only that which has a mild, nutty flavour; twice a week, when not giving rape, give half a teaspoonful of cracked hemp per bird. Every day for the next week instead of the egg food, give the equivalent of a small teaspoonful of bread scalded in milk, pressed nearly dry, and sprinkled with maw seed. After the first week, you may stop the bread and milk, and go back to the egg food, but give it only in the above quantity, and only twice a week. Withhold green food for a fortnight; then you may give a little three times a week plantain stalks or seedy chickweed for choice. Keep cage scrupulously clean, and strewn with gritty sand. Add three drops tincture of gentian to the water daily for three days.

Enamel and Eggs (Beginner, M.O.).—(1) Provided you take due care to see the enamel is set and dried hard before any birds are introduced into the cages, it will be perfectly harmless, especially if you use the best brands. Use it discreetly, putting on evenly and smoothly, and two or three thin coats in preference to one thick coat, allowing each coat to become quite dry before applying the next. This is the way to avoid those smeary, botchy jobs with guttery surfaces and "beads" of hard enamel hanging about. (2) The only way is to transfer the eggs for a hen you do not wish to sit, or cannot trust to carry out her duties. Or perhaps some friend might let you have the eggs of a pair of common feeders when they were removed to make way for a clutch of more valuable eggs. Failing this, you might make up a clutch by taking one each from three or four common pairs, which must, of course, be laid within a day or two of each other. The way to get a clutch of Linnet eggs for the purpose should be obvious. There should be plenty about.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Goldfinch Mule Breeding.

H. Gillard.—It has evidently escaped you, but I have frequently this season stated that a Goldfinch will fertilise eggs although its beak is not quite clear. Still, I should hardly expect a Goldie which was moulting last March to breed Mules this season; the cross moult would almost of a certainty put him "out of action." Get the "Nutshell" booklet on the Goldfinch (post free, 2½d.), which will tell you fully how to feed for muling, song, etc. The hen Canary when she hatches out young should be given egg-bread, made fresh at least once daily. I prefer egg and good home-made bread (crumbled), with a little castor sugar dusted amongst it; nothing else (seed, etc.) with it. In addition, I give Canary and summer rape (mixed) in the seed-hopper, with cracked hemp in a separate dish, with a little crushed safflower or sunflower seeds, or a few crushed groats or a little coarse oatmeal amongst it. I give a few young and tender sprays of chickweed (or watercress) when the "babies" are two days old, and quickly increase the quantity until I am giving this ad libitum, with seeding shepherd's purse in addition. Some of my hens feed almost solely upon these green-foods. An occasional dose of sulphate of soda in the drinking water (as much as just covers a shilling, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls) is a grand thing, remember, to revivify a hen flagging at her duties

A Queer Case.

Avis.—I think you did the only possible thing in chloroforming the Goldfinch. No treatment, I am quite sure, could have been of avail. The actions of the bird were certainly extraordinary, and I have never before heard of such a case. I am afraid I can offer no opinion as to the cause. Our Mr. Yates might have elucidated this had you sent the body to him for post-mortem examination. No wonder you suspected "trouble in the head"; it reads as though "brain trouble" could be the only solution. You say there were "no signs of general illness"; if the bird had been weakly (in a very debilitated condition), there must have been some sign of this shown. The symptoms of paralysis towards the end were, of course, signs of great weakness, but may have been a result only of the continued strain put upon the bird's constitution by whatever ailment it was suffering from. I don't consider that your treatment was in any way at fault; there are weakly Goldfinches just as there are those with strong constitutions, and no system of feeding will help the former to survive. A bird that is constantly inactive and ailing is best given its liberty; I always open the cage door to such, for they are only a source of worry and trouble.

An Indoor Aviary.

A.K.J.—Indoor aviaries (that is, rooms fitted up to keep a number of birds in flying loose) can be made very pretty and a source of pleasure, but as leading up to breeding successes they are somewhat of a failure. If one does not mind whether young birds are reared or not, this point, of course, counts for nothing; but I gather from your letter that you are anxious to breed birds, in which case you would be better advised to house each pair of birds in a roomy cage to themselves. The different pairs are apt to interfere with each other's domestic arrangements—quarrel over mates and nesting sites, pull nests to bits and the eggs, or young out on to the floor, etc., and it is not possible to safeguard against these happenings. In a cage, of course, it is different. Your arrangements are right enough. You could put in six hen Canaries and two or three cocks, two pairs each of Linnets and Goldfinches, and one pair each of Greenfinches, Bullies, Redpolls, Twites, Siskins, and Chaffinches. Or instead of Canaries, our Mr. Page might be able to suggest to you one or two pairs of suitable Foreign birds. 2. It is almost too late now to pair a Canary and a hen Bullfinch—unless the latter is eager to go to nest. The best plan is to run such a couple together through the spring (winter, too, if possible) months. 4. The feeding and general management is rather too big a subject to deal adequately with in this column. You should subscribe to "Cage Bird Hybrids" (6d. monthly), or get Part 1. (now on sale), in which foods, etc., are fully described.

An Albino Dove.

Nero.—You ought to make sure of your "facts" before starting out to lecture people—and poor me, of all persons, whose profuse crop of premature grey hairs has been induced solely by this weekly task of answering more or less knotty questions at a moment's notice. You are entirely wrong in saying that the National British Bird and Mule Club "does not recognise any kind of Albinos and does not grant medals for same." As a member of the committee of that club, I say that it does recognise Albinos, and, further, that it has offered medals specially to encourage their exhibition at the shows given the club patronage, medals, that is, for competition solely amongst Albinos and rare-feathered British birds. What is the practice of the Scottish B.B. and M.C. I cannot at the moment say. Now the judge officiating at a show held under the patronage of the N.B.B. and M.C. has to be a member of the club, and is supposed to adopt the club's list of "desirable cage birds" as a guide. Do we all on that list, therefore my previous reply to you was quite correct, viz, that you would have to run the risk of getting your white, pink-eyed Turtle Dove "wrong classed." Some judges adhere to the list, others do not, for the Meadow and Black-headed Buntings are to be seen in the prize money at some club shows, although not listed. If your bird is genuinely a Turtle Dove (Turtur communis), it is, of course, unquestionably a British species, just as much so as the House Sparrow. If it is merely a pink-eyed variety of the Barbary Dove (sometimes called the Java Dove) it is common in the bird-shops, and is not a British bird. Personally, I should be inclined to admit into a rare-feathered class any species of British bird which could reasonably be held to be a "desirable cage bird" (whether listed by the club or not). But I am only one amongst many, and although a "judge at the Palace and considered an expert" (as you unkindly put it), other people are entitled to differ from me. Anyway, I hope you will now be more pleased with your humble servant and his answers.

A Disappointed Feeling.

Lillie.—I advise you to get the two "Nutshell" booklets which deal with the Linnet and the Goldfinch (post free 2½d. each), for in these you will find excellent and up-to-date advice concerning the feeding and management of these birds, getting them into muling condition, etc. You certainly appear to have had wretched luck this season; but cheer up, for it is sure to turn. And you are in good company, anyway, for the behaviour of my own birds has been "most cussed," as the Yankees say, and I am anything but over-run with youngsters up to the present. I cannot understand the Goldfinch not singing, seeing that it appears to be in good health. Are you really sure that it is a cock bird? It is evidently not in muling form, anyhow. As regards the Canaries, you should follow out the simple and straightforward methods of procedure given in our handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners." The cat must have injured the bird internally very possibly broke her neck though the shock of the attack would in itself suffice to kill her. It is no use persevering further with the Green hen, which is losing feathers. That she is in moult is only too evident. If she had not started when you bought her, the change of quarters may have brought it about. It is hard luck.

Brevities.

A Weed (J. Kay).—This is the yellow Goat's-beard (popularly known as "Jack Go-to-bed-at-noon"). The flowers are often mistaken for those of the dandelion, but the leaves serve to at once distinguish the two plants. I do not know that it is of any use to give to birds.

Another Weed (G. R. Askman).—This is one of the Pepper-worts (probably the Narrow-leaved variety) "weeds" belonging to the order Cruciferæ, and near relatives of Shepherd's Purse. The seeds of many of the wild plants belonging to the Cruciferous tribe are utilised largely as food by seed-eating birds in a state of nature. They are quite safe, and good to give to captive birds.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hard-bills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

A Bramblefinch's Claws (Blaydon).—A diseased condition of the claws has been set up, and can only be combated by steeping the foot twice daily in some effective germicide—say, 8 to 10 drops of Lysol in half a teacupful of water (warm). This will soon remedy matters. If the bird can grip the perches properly, the loss of the nails would not affect his breeding, though "whole" birds are to be preferred.

Cutting Talkers' Tongues (W.H.S.).—Any severity in my remarks was directed solely against the practice of tongue "slitting"; one can hardly be too emphatic and plain-speaking when dealing with this barbarous practice, which can only be classed with the other atrocity, the "blinding" of Chaffinches for the purposes of singing contests. I feel sure you will be in agreement with me as to this. Your present letter certainly amply justifies the question you asked me; but it has its sad side, inasmuch as it shows that belief in the necessity of tongue cutting is even more widespread than I imagined. The pity is 'tis true.

Cage-moulted Linnets (H.J.P.).—It is quite true that the previously blackish legs and feet of a Linnet become more or less flesh coloured after a house-moult; that is a sure sign of a cage-moulted bird, though some show it less than others. As a rule a bird twice house-moulted has whiter legs still; and so on. A house-moulted Linnet would not exhibit any trace of red on the breast; this is another safe sign—I have heard of exceptions, but never experienced one.

Lark Foods (British Workman).—In the "Nutshell" booklet upon the Skylark (post free, 2½d.) recipes for Lark food will be found (including one for contest singing purposes), and much other valuable information you will find very helpful and which I cannot give in the space into which I have to condense these answers.

A Sample of Summer Rape (W. Purchase).—This is rank bad seed, full of "weevils" (or mites, which can plainly be seen crawling amongst it). It is old and musty, and surely calculated to harm birds, while it does not taste like genuine German (sweet) rape seed; or it is a mixture of that and charlock. In an unlucky moment I started to "chew" a mouthful of this seed before noticing that it was alive with mites—I tried to imagine I was an insectivorous bird and enjoying the meal.

Identity of Bird (C. Rosier).—The bird you saw and describe was a Red-backed Shrike, and from your excellent description I have little hesitation in saying that it was a female. This species may be described as a "small bird of prey"; it is commonly known as the "Butcher bird," though this has almost too sanguinary a sound to be accurate. It is a summer migrant, and not at all common.

Acquiring Nightingale Notes (No Nom-de-plume).—Hand-reared singing birds will imitate the songs (more or less) of any species they are brought up amongst. Thus there would be naught of the impossible about a young Skylark acquiring the notes of the Nightingale if kept in a room which contained the latter bird in full song. I don't mean by this that the Skylark would imitate the Nightingale song note for note and sing it just as well—I mean that you would be able to recognise notes of the Gale in the song uttered by the Lark.

Rearing Young Finches (O. Padley).—The important thing to arrange for is an ad libitum supply of seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse and groundsel—all plentiful and easily obtained. The usual seeds, of course, must be offered in addition, including plenty of good hemp and (for the Greenfinches) white sunflower seed. A dishful of egg-bread (or half egg-bread, half high-class insectile food) would also most likely be utilised to good purpose.

An Upset (Glasgow).—The sudden change on to the mixed seed wrought the mischief. Get half an ounce of crystals of citrate of iron and quinine from a chemist, and dissolve fresh twice daily in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much as will just cover a threepenny bit. Keep up for a week, if necessary.

Goldfinches Bred in an Aviary (Rolyan).—It is not by any means uncommon for Goldfinches to be bred in an aviary. It is a creditable feat, nevertheless. With the four young you have bred you should be able to get quite a nice lot of home-bred Goldies next season, if you care to try to produce them.

A Linnet's Leg (Hilda).—I do not think there is anything serious the matter, and if you twice daily gently anoint the place with a very little carbolic ointment, the "raw look" will speedily disappear. Write me again, if necessary. By-the-bye, I think the perfume on your note-paper is real sweet—an agreeable change from the speaking corpses with which I am sometimes favoured.

Two Matters (Novice).—1. Your Goldfinch Mules are what are known as Dark Mules, and will not change their plumage at the moult and come into the colour of Canaries. Light Mules are light in their nest feathers. Add to the seeds mentioned one part each of teazle and hemp seeds, and then the mixture will be a very good one. 2. If the sweet pepper left from last year is quite free from mould (looks, smells, and tastes good), then it can safely be used up this season. You might have sent a sample for inspection.

Bullfinch Hens Ailing (Hybrid).—Your hens are suffering from the trouble fully described in our last issue by Mr. G. Yates in his answers given under the heading "Post Mortems"—note the reply given to "Acanthis Barbarus." If the treatment mentioned therein will not effect a cure, then their case is hopeless. It is some kind of trouble in which the breathing apparatus is affected, and unless a remedy is applied in the very early stages, I question whether there is any cure. Isolate the birds, and keep in a warm, dry atmosphere. You will no doubt have read Mr. Yates' remarks about the delicacy of the breathing organs of birds.

Ailing Linnets (P. Watson).—Send specimens of the worms to Mr. G. Yates, our post-mortem expert, who will determine what kind they are, and advise you of the best treatment to exterminate them. My own practical knowledge of worms in birds is nil; I only know about them that which I have read in Mr. Yates' articles. You will note that this gentleman commenced a series of articles last week concerning the commoner diseases of birds; in due course inflammation will be dealt with therein and treatment advised.

Hand-rearing Jays, etc. (R. P. B.).—What!—again! And after the very long reply I gave on the very same subject only last week to Mr. F. J. Whibley? It is enough to make one quote Shakespeare. A really first-class stock cage would be one 4ft. (to 5ft.) long, 2ft. high, and 18ins. wide, with a punch-bar front made of very stout gauge wire, 1½in. mesh, one perch at each end, big door in front and at one end, deep drawboard lined with sheet zinc and food and water vessels to hang on the front. A broom handle makes good perches. Paint outside black; inside with pale blue sanitary distemper. Such a cage answers admirably for my own Magpie.

Magpie Matters (K. Bush).—1. This is rather a ticklish question, but I doubt very much whether a Magpie would be talking when only three months old—it might be just beginning to imitate sounds. 2. A Magpie "totally unable to feed itself, unable to fly, and with a tail not the length of one's little finger," could not possibly be nine months old. Have you written "months" in mistake for "weeks"? But such a bird as you describe would not be half nine weeks old; while to allege that it could "talk fluently and imitate a dog" is just R.O.T.

Mules Wanted (Novice, Preston).—To have got another hen Canary would have been the best thing you could have done. Pity you do not say how you have been feeding the couple; but if you have been giving her egg-bread, with a little niger, hemp, etc. (the usual stimulating treatment, in fact), then you cannot do more. If a hen won't go to nest, she just won't—that is the long and the short of it. I have two young (1909) hens myself which have shown never a sign of nesting so far—goodness only knows why; from what I hear this trouble seems far from uncommon this season. I sympathise with you.

More Weeds (Weeds).—Two of these "weeds" I had to get identified, being unknown to me. My kindly informant states that No. 2 is probably water crowfoot, growing in water or in watery, marshy ground; flowers white, plant unwholesome. No. 4, Milfoil (or Yarrow) likewise unwholesome. No. 3 is Goosegrass, a wholesome plant, but it is one of which I have had no experience in the feeding of birds. No. 1 is either chickweed or scarlet pimpernel. If it bears a white flower, it is the former, and, of course, excellent for birds. If a red flower, it is the latter, and unwholesome. The specimens you sent were too small to aid accurate identification.

What Birds (N. Wilson).—Eighteen (or thereabouts) small birds would go comfortably into your aviary. Either put in pairs of each species, or cock birds only (no hens). You could make a fine choice from amongst the Linnet, Goldfinch, Greenfinch, Bullfinch, Twite, Redpoll, Siskin, Chaffinch and Bramblehuch (one bird, or one pair, only of the three latter), and the Yellow, Reed and Snow Buntings. I cannot guarantee that they will "agree well" together; they ought to do, but then, birds differ in disposition, like human beings.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., etc.

Parrakeets, Pekin Robins, etc.

T. J. James.—(1) On reconsidering the matter, the Rosellas very seldom scream, and their whistling call note, which they mostly make use of, is not so irritating nor anything like so piercing as the scream of the Cockatiel. Many colour Parrakeets, Rodrump Parrakeets, and also Stanley Parrakeets, while under periods of excitement undoubtedly scream, and loudly, but this is not incessant, and they are by no means noisy birds. While I could not recommend them generally, I had two cock Moustache Parrakeets in one of my aviaries that I do not think let off more than one shriek a week. (2) Pekins are very subject to this trouble, and I fear the birds were contaminated when they reached you; but if we have decent weather for a bit they should do well. All you can do is to supply wholesome food—soft food, ripe fruit, and live insects, and see that there are no draughty corners in their aviary. Give bird you still have (if it is still alive) 10 to 12 drops of Dinneford's Magnesia over its soft food, and if the eye region is swollen, well cleanse it with warm water and then bathe with a zinc and rosewater eye solution, and keep it strictly out of all draught. (3) This is very unusual; try sitting very quiet in front of their aviary for as long intervals as possible, and enter the aviary as little as possible. It should be possible to so arrange your food and water hoppers that they can be attended to from without. The birds with long claws must be caught and the claws shortened, but you must not cut back into the small vein or they will bleed badly; if such should occur, have a little Friar's Balsam handy, and promptly touch the claw with same. This should prevent disaster.

What Birds, Infertility, etc.

Volveris.—(1) Cowbirds, Thrushes (any you can get in true pairs), Rosy Pastors, Black-headed Sibias, Malabar Starlings, Dayal Birds, Silver-eared Mesias, Indian Green-winged and Australian Crested Doves. There are some grand birds among these, and a good series should be a grand sight. (2) This annoying trouble seems general with almost all keepers of Redheaded Finches—putting the eggs under Cutthroats is almost sure to be successful. (3) I much fear that fine as he is as to condition, that your cock Grasslinch is aged, and that accounts for infertile eggs. These birds agree pretty well together. Why not get another pair? They might change over, or, at any rate, change either the male or female of your present pair. Of course, it is impossible for me to say which bird is at fault. In spite of looking well, there is something wrong with one of the birds—age, or weakness somewhere.

What Other Parrakeets?

F. Rose.—With your two pairs of Budgerigars you could keep one pair each of Cockatiels and Rosella Parrakeets. I have always found these species to agree well together, and the pleasing harmony of their colouration goes well together, and the effect is very pleasing. They will not take any harm from the general diet necessary for all species; neither will they quarrel even in the breeding season, if you adopt the precaution of isolating the nests of the larger species away from the Budgerigars. It is better not to overcrowd, and I recommend you to be content with the species named; at the most I do not advise you to add more than pairs each of Blue-winged and Madagascar Lovebirds. Diet: Two seed mixtures—(1) canary and white millet in equal parts; (2) oats, hemp, sunflower, and paddy rice in equal parts. Also supply green-food, cuttlebone, and a little fruit. Pieces of plain biscuit may be given when they have young to feed.

A Widowed Budgerigar.

Amateur.—I should say he would rear his young family successfully. You can assist him by supplying small pieces of plain biscuit in addition to the usual diet. Also supply as much grass in flower (seeding grass) as he will take; this is very plentiful just now, and should ensure the feeding and rearing of the young. Do not introduce another hen till the whole brood have left the nest. There is no stated age, but as soon as you see the young Budgies freely shelling seed for themselves, you can safely dispose of them; usually it is quite safe to do so a fortnight after they leave the nest. I cannot advise more than three breeding pairs, as, if you have any luck, you must allow accommodation for young birds, and you may very probably get three broods of young birds simultaneously, and they occupy space, even if you do not retain them long. The probability is, you would probably get better results from three pairs than five in the space at your command.

Parrot Out of Order.

W.S.—Give one dose of Dinneford's Magnesia—one part magnesia to three parts water. Repeat the dose several times with an interval of two days between each dose, and on the alternating days well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. You can continue to give the bread, etc., also plain biscuit; and if the bird prefers it, these can be moistened either in plain water or the chemical food water. I should also give a little boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day) at present; after boiling till soft, drain away all moisture and spot on to it about a dozen drops of the chemical food. Give the following seed mixture for the present: Two parts each canary and white millet, and one part of hemp, well mix and keep a supply continually in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts, cuttlebone, and keep the cage tray covered with gritty sand. Keep the bird in any well-ventilated position that is free from draught. You will, of course, give the water containing the magnesia, and on other days chemical food, in lieu of the ordinary drinking water. Be very quiet in its vicinity, and as soon as it gets to thoroughly know you and your intentions towards it, it will lose its savage demeanour, but you have evidently got hold of an adult bird, which will be more difficult to tame. Report progress a fortnight hence.

Brevities.

Waxbills Dying (Shoer).—You give me no details of your aviary. What shelter accommodation have you? What is your county? So far as I am able to make a guess, it would appear that they caught a chill owing to a sudden change of weather, and succumbed to pneumonia. If you will describe to me size and other details of your aviary, I can possibly render you more definite assistance.

Amazon out of Condition ("C.B.").—Keep the bowels well regulated with Dinneford's Magnesia, but the voidings must not be allowed to remain watery-loose. When not giving the magnesia, well colour the drinking water with the chemical food, fairly regularly for a time. I should also get a box of honey and borax from the chemist and put a little on its tongue once or twice a day while the box lasts. Owing to cooking operations, etc., the temperature of a kitchen is apt to be very variable. Keep the bird in the most equable portion, and strictly guard from draught. At the same time, it should get light and fresh air. The illet should consist of seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuits, with cuttlebone and grit.

Budgerigars not Breeding (Green Amateur).—(1) There is nothing wrong; the birds will ultimately settle down and breed. They sometimes take longer to do this in small quarters than in more roomy ones. At the same time, your aviary is not too small for breeding successes, though, of course, it will be apparent that the young must be removed as soon as they can feed themselves. It must be noted that free-breeding as Budgerigars are, they do not settle down with the same precision as Canaries, but, as a rule, all hatched out are fully reared. There is plenty of time yet this season—right up to September. (2) Give them as much grass in flower (seeding grass) as they will eat, exercise patience, and luck will come your way.

Birds for Indoor Aviary (Midget).—Green Avadavats, Orange-breasted, Orange-cheek, St. Helena and Sydney Waxbills would best meet the conditions you name. The price of the first four species varies between 3s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. per pair, while the latter would cost about 25s. If you are able to get sprays of blighty foliage (from rose or fruit trees for preference), it will conduce greatly to the birds' well-being. Supply spray millet liberally as well as the canary and white millet mixture. All the species named are robust, but, like all imported birds, need care and freedom from draught as new arrivals.

Grey Parrot Laying Eggs in Cage (J. Jones).—You have no cause for anxiety; the temporary indisposition was due to difficulty in getting rid of the egg, and now the second has been successfully laid I do not anticipate you will have any further trouble with her. As a tonic, well colour the drinking water with Parrish's chemical food every other day for a month. The only risk is from egg-binding. To make this as small as possible, keep a piece of cuttlebone and a lump of old mortar rubbish in the cage, and when you notice any symptoms indicative of laying another egg, see that she is secure from draughts and taking a chill. Such cases are not at all uncommon.

PARK AND LAKE AVICULTURE.

Ornamental Ducks.

W. A. M.—There are not many crested species of waterfowl, but Mandarins and Carolina ducks both have large crests, and are fairly coloured. I expect these are what you are thinking of, as they are generally thought the prettiest fancy ducks. Red-crested Pochards and Tufted Pochards are also crested, and are strikingly coloured, though not so bright as the last. In the case of all these, however, the female is dull coloured, and the drake also loses his brilliant plumage during the summer months. If you want ducks which will look showy all the year round, and are similar in the two sexes, you can try the ordinary English Sheldrake, the Chilian Wigeon, and the White-faced Tree-duck; but none of these are crested. Muscovy ducks have crests, though these are not visible unless erected, and their plumage is handsomely variegated, with lustrous green-black and white, with a bare red patch round the eye. Drake and duck are alike except in size; these are bigger than ordinary wild ducks, unlike the rest I have named. Your query re sexes of Jays should go to Mr. Weston.

Keeping Birds' Eggs.

J. W. A.—You certainly ought not to varnish birds' eggs, as this makes them all of a uniform appearance, which is quite unnatural, as different sorts have different textures. Varnishing a collection would quite destroy its value in the eyes of any real student of birds.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

K. Spooner.—Canary died of metro-peritonitis, owing to rupture of soft-shelled egg within the oviduct.

Avis.—Cock Canary died of inpaction of the crop. This organ was distended to its utmost. The bird has ingested more than it could possibly assimilate. Feed a little more sparingly, and give them an occasional saline aperient, such as a few grains of sulphate of soda, in the water to drink. Both deaths would not necessarily arise from inpaction, but I feel convinced that over-stimulation by too frequent or too plentiful feeding is the cause of your trouble.

Kathleen Lewis-Barred.—The young bird suffered from anæmia, due to innutrition. It was very weakly, and in poor condition. A little egg food included in the diet might have been useful, and a periodical administration of cod liver oil, or malt extract, would have been a useful adjunct. As it was, I consider you did very well to keep it alive for the length of time you did. There was no actual disease, but a process of depletion, and a poorness of the blood arising solely from innutrition.

Evins Bros.—Post-mortem examination revealed the existence of a chronic affection of some standing. Both lungs and chest wall were diseased, and may be described as a chronic pleurisy, the pneumonia being of later date. I cannot definitely say whether it was a tubercular pleurisy, but it looks suspiciously like it. I am afraid you can do little with the other one that is affected. You are quite right; it is a wasting disease, and the cage occupied by this bird should receive thorough disinfection. I am afraid you will be able to do very little with your other sick bird, but you might try four drops of ammoniated tincture of quinine in its drinking water night and morning, and occasionally a little cod liver oil mixed with milk sop.

E. Bemier.—No, your birds are not suffering from an infectious disease. Enteritis, due to some irregularity in the dieting, is the cause of death. Reduce quantity of egg food given, and give rape seed two or three times a week only. It seems to me you are all too keen to force on your birds, and so overstimulate them, with disastrous results. Use weak solution of lysol for washing pots, and give two drops of some antiseptic in drinking water daily for a few days or twice weekly for several weeks. If diarrhœa occurs as symptom, which is very possible, resort to subnitrate of bismuth, as recommended to "N. D. D. 36."

N. D. P. (No. 30).—Enteritis or inflammation of the bowles is the trouble you have to contend with. the cause of which is evidently associated with some irritant introduced with the food. You are fortunate, so far, in having lost only two birds. Be very sparing in your supply of green food; examine carefully your seed. Do not force your young birds too much, and feed a little more sparingly for a time. To any that may be affected give twice daily a small piece of bread and milk, not too sloppy, and dust over a little subnitrate of bismuth, which you can obtain from your chemist. In the drinking water place a little permanganate of potash just sufficient to colour it, and keep your pots scrupulously clean. Many thanks re your kind remarks. I am gratified to hear you consider the articles useful to fanciers. I do not anticipate that you will have much further trouble, if you will carry out these directions.

A Railwayman.—Pneumonia is accounting for the loss of your hens. It is of an infectious nature, yet peculiar as it may seem, the cock birds do not often take the infection. Hens more particularly become attacked, often dying on a nest of eggs, or when setting on the newly-hatched; this may be accounted for by the fact that at this period they are more susceptible to attack. I have several times described this affection under post-mortem headings, so look up one or two back number—one, I believe, is described at some length in issue of May 28th. The lungs are always coal black, differing in this way from those cases of pneumonia arising from causes atmospherical. You should have investigated this outbreak before, when you might have been spared a great deal of loss, and had you given up breeding for the time being you would have been better off than at present. Give up all breeding for the season; the disease will wear itself out before the next breeding season. If you care to adopt any treatment at all for ailing hens, give a few grains of carbonate of ammonia in the drinking water night and morning, but it is seldom that a hen, once attacked, ever recovers.

S. Sutton.—You are losing your birds from a contagious disease of a very serious nature, and am afraid your losses will be even greater. It is a disease which attacks young birds mostly, and is very fatal. I have known quite a lot of young Canaries die of this same disease this season; only, unfortunately, in most cases it is allowed to run on before attention is given to it. It is a contagious disease in which the microbe is introduced into the system by the digestive tract, not by inhalation from the air. The medium is food, soiled by the excrement of other diseased birds, containing the germs. In its passage from bird to bird it gains in virulency or degree of harmfulness, so that unnecessary delay in tackling such outbreaks allows of its rapid spread, and renders preventive treatment much more difficult. The organ principally affected is the liver, which shows upon its surfaces patches of dead or necrosed tissue, and differs from lesions of septic fever affecting the same organ by the absence of nodules or prominences. These dead portions are brought about by the action of the microbe which finds its principal seat in the liver and other digestive organs. The disease may be described as "Bacterial Necrosis of the Liver." A bird so affected may live several weeks; in fact, may be slightly affected without showing any symptoms, these depending upon the amount of liver substance affected. As this increases, the liver, which is a most important organ, loses its functional activity and death ensues. If you will look up reply to F.J.W.S., in Cage Birds of June 4th last you will read of a similar outbreak. Medicinal treatment of affected birds will not avail you much; you have allowed the disease too much play. You can, however, try a few drops of Lysol in the drinking water daily for a week, allowing two drops to each bird. Cages occupied by deceased should be well scrubbed with soap and hot water, afterwards brushing well in a 5 per cent. solution of pure carbolic acid. Remove also the healthy birds into another room, and replace any that may show signs of illness. Wash your feeding and watering utensils in a weak solution of the same antiseptic, burn or destroy any sand, grit from the bottom of cages; and lastly, you will do well to give up breeding for the season. I have remarked that it attacks young birds chiefly. By this I do not mean that older ones cannot carry on the disease; what I mean to imply is that the young ones are most susceptible to its ravages, the others possessing a much greater power of resistance. When your next loss occurs I shall be glad if you will send bird on to me, so as to note any variation in the post-mortem symptoms. It is a disease of vast importance to fanciers, and is almost as fatal in its nature as septic fever.

J. Forster.—Hen Canary died of enteritis, brought about by irritation of the intestine by ptomaines, or poisons generated in the foods. There is evidently some fault in your dieting. Apply directions as above in reply to H. Hayman. Your treatment was good, and no doubt she would have made a permanent recovery, but for the fact that the cause was not removed. You must thoroughly overhaul your feeding materials, and try and ascertain the cause. In addition to bismuth, you may give occasionally a few drops of sulphuric acid, commercial acid, not aromatic, in the drinking water. This is a very good medicine for obstinate or persistent diarrhœa.

H. Hayman.—I am very sorry for your misfortune; it is certainly most disappointing, after having reared your birds to this age, to have them taken off in this manner. The trouble is dietetic, and even although you may ensure every care as to cleanliness in your feeding, and feeding utensils, yet you may have overlooked some little essential point in its preparations. Your egg food must be perfectly freshly prepared at least once daily, as at this period of the year ptomaine changes take place very rapidly, and the eggs used must be of the best quality, at the same time not giving it in too large a quantity. Your feeding and drinking pots might with advantage be washed regularly with a very weak solution of Lysol. This also may be given in the drinking water in doses of two or three drops, when it acts as an intestinal antiseptic, and arrests too rapid putrefactive changes. I trust that by adopting these preventive measures you will be spared further loss.

J. Wilson.—Yours was another case of ptomaine poisoning. If you will peruse the two preceding replies, you will have all the information necessary. This trouble is very common at the present time.

A White Scotch Fancy Canary.

SIR,—I see from CAGE BIRDS of June 25 that Mr. C. Kelsey has bred a white Scotch Fancy Canary. If it is Mr. C. Kelsey, of Manchester, who records the fact, I may say that I had a hen from him last year from which I have bred a white Scotch Fancy. But it has a dark cap. It is on the sticks and is doing well.

Do Thunderstorms Affect Bird Breeding?

SIR,—Kindly allow me to inform Mr. W. C. Winn that thunderstorms do not upset the results of bird breeding, i.e. hatching, any more than cutting a bird's tongue makes it talk or sing; the latter your correspondent, "Nimrod," shows up to perfection, and I consider it is about time that such fiction was exploded. Now, to prove what I say. I had two birds sitting on eggs, one with three the other with six. The former hatched all three, and I had no results from the other. And out of four nests with the latter the results have been the same, as during the incubating of the two nests above-mentioned we (in London) had three thunderstorms in one week. I believe the same holds good among some poultry breeders.

A Bird from Labrador: What is it?

SIR,—I brought home four birds from Labrador two years ago. I gave three away, and they were all dead in a week. Mine is alive and well, only it is always rough in feather. I am anxious to know what bird it is. They called it a Jay in Labrador. It is like a miniature Jackdaw, only it has a longer tail. It is a perfect mimic, pipes like a Starling, and in fact resembles him in all his ways. I fancy he is a cock bird. He is a ravenous bird, and eats anything—fish or flesh. Could any of your numerous readers tell me his proper name, and if I am feeding him right? He is very tame; in fact, I did not have him a week before he was eating out of my hand. Any further information I will gladly give.

More Mules from Mules.

SIR,—Referring to my letter of last week, and your editorial footnote, I am quite clear that my bird is a dark Linnet Mule, and that no Canary has had any access to the hen. I am quite willing for one of your experts to examine the young birds. You give my name as "R." Farrance, which should be

D. FARRANCE.

SIR,—In further reference to the case of the mules bred by Mr. Murray, of Sunderland, from a cock Linnet mule and a hen Canary, I had a visit from Mr. Murray on Saturday, June 18th, and I was sorry to hear that the bird with the white cap and flights had "gone" light, and that he had no hope of its recovery. I advised the usual remedy for such cases, and at the same time asked that should the bird not recover he would send the body on to your Mr. Weston as soon as possible, in order to give ocular proof that the bird had existed. I have since learned that the bird did die, and was at once sent on to Mr. Weston, who will doubtless give his opinion in due course, probably after he has also seen the living specimens. Mr. Murray has now only two left out of the five hatched from the first nest (both dark ones), although he has two from the second nest, both on the perches. Readers will probably have inferred from the tone of my previous letter that I was of the opinion that the birds were what they were represented to be, viz., three-quarter bred Canaries, although my opinion was not endorsed by two or three well-known mule breeders who had just the same opportunities of examining the birds as I had. It was with the object of examining the second nest, and further investigating the circumstances under which they were bred that a party of fanciers, composed of Messrs. J. Riseborough, C. Waters, J. Copeland, and myself visited Mr. Murray on Sunday, June 26th. We found that the peculiar arrangement of Mr. Murray's bird-room made it practically impossible for any bird to find its way into it unless deliberately taken in. In the bird-room itself there was nothing but Canaries, some of which were flying loose, a hen Goldfinch, also flying loose, and the cock Linnet mule, which was in a breeding cage with a heavily variegated Norwich hen—the father and mother of the birds under discussion. The hen was again sitting upon five eggs (their third nest), and both birds were undoubtedly on the best of terms with each other. We next directed our attention to the two youngsters from the second nest, and these birds were carefully examined, and were also compared with two hen Linnet mules which were bred last year. One of the youngsters is a dark one, or rather a variegated one, with a white abdomen, a white tail with one dark feather, and three white feathers in each wing. The other bird is a white one, with a dark splash between the shoulders about the size of a florin, white wings with two dark feathers in the left wing, and a dark tail. The beak of this bird is rather a peculiar colour, and resembles neither the Linnet nor the Canary, being of a sort of pinkish yellow colour—if I may describe it so. I might mention that the dark feathers of this bird are rather of an ashy grey colour, rather lighter than the dark plumage of the other bird, and these two birds practically put the genuineness of their parentage beyond all doubt, taken together with the circumstances under which they were bred; and I have the permission of both Mr. Riseborough and Mr. Waters, and also that of Mr. Copeland, to say that they are now convinced that the birds were bred as Mr. Murray stated, viz., from the cock Linnet mule and the hen Canary, as they cannot see how they could have been bred otherwise. I have taken a very great interest in this case since it has become known, and I do not remember any previous case that has been so thoroughly investigated, and I am rather pleased that my opinion as to the genuineness of these birds has been endorsed by two such capable fanciers as Mr. Riseborough and Mr. Waters. I might mention, sir, that these birds, together with the survivors of the first nest, will, all being well, be forwarded on to your Mr. Weston as soon as they are able to crack hard seed, for examination by him and any other experts whom he cares to show them to, and they will also be on view at our Young Bird Show on Saturday evening, July 9th, admission to which is free.

Which is the Best Green Food?

SIR,—I notice a correspondent brings forward the question of dandelion as a green food for young and old Canaries. As a food for young birds from three days old, I unhesitatingly discard it as most unsuitable, and so never use it. Dandelion leaves, no doubt, for certain purposes are very valuable, but only for old birds in the early spring to bring them into healthy breeding condition, or when an old bird requires a liver tonic. As a food for young birds I consider it possesses too many medicinal properties, and for this reason the continual use naturally upsets both old and young birds. The hen birds after incubation, and whilst bringing up the young, are generally relaxed, and dandelion naturally brings about diarrhœa and inflammation. Ordinary green food, fresh lettuce, chickweed, watercress, and groundsel I have found, after some years' experience, in every way suitable.

The Keeping and Feeding of Skylarks in Captivity.

SIR,—Allow me to say that I consider it best to keep a Skylark outside in a wooden cage, but hung on a nail; but only when the weather is fine. Also I think one's birds do better without canary seed, which some fanciers give to Skylarks. I feed my Larks as follows:—1lb. of coarse oatmeal, 1lb. barley meal, 1lb. pea meal, 3d. packet of a stock food, and ½lb. hemp seed. I put all into separate jars, as I think the birds then get each sort more equal. I put about four teaspoonfuls of each sort into a jar, add a little grated carrot, half a teaspoonful of linseed meal, one teaspoonful of currants (grocers'), and one piece of white bread with the water pressed out of it. Once a week I boil them an egg and mix it with the food. Also Lark fanciers should see that the drinking fountain is kept from going slimy. I may add that I mix about 1½ozs. of fine potted meat with the food.

An Amateur's Successful Start.

SIR,—I should like to let readers of CAGE BIRDS know of my success, and how I have benefited by reading your valuable paper. In March, 1909, I bought a cock canary, seeing some advertised in "C.B." for sale; these I found out were Yorkshires—up to then I looked upon a Canary as a Canary merely, not knowing the different breeds, which I have since found out. The man I bought my bird of advised me to get a hen, and try breeding; also he told me to get CAGE BIRDS, which I did, and have not missed a week since. I bought two hens and succeeded in rearing 21 young birds last year. I sold all off except two hens, which I kept. I bought another cock. Having a little experience now, I thought I would run a few more pairs, and I am pleased to tell you that up to now I have got 26 young flying, and 10 more in the nests—total, 36—and 2 hens sitting, thanks to information received from CAGE BIRDS and also from good old CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, never having bred a bird before. I am getting overstocked, but am advertising some for sale.

The Type of the Lancashire Canary.

SIR,—I was rather amused in reading Mr. West's letter re "The Type of Lancashire Canary." Surely, Arthur, you don't want us to believe that such an old and experienced judge as Mr. Bexson would ever dream of putting a Lancashire or any other bird first in its class that could not stand up? He also says that he knows of Lancashires being put down for showing Norwich or Crest properties. Quite right. The writer remembers Mr. House putting down the late Mr. Collinge's birds for showing too much Crest. What was the result? Mr. Collinge refused to show again in the Lancashire classes under Mr. House. It was a well-known fact that Mr. Collinge did use the Crest to cross with his Lancashires, which is not at all necessary. The Crest is not required to breed good Lancashires. They can be bred and are bred (some of the best birds of to-day) without any Crest blood in them. As for producing "Crests" from two ticked Coppies, to say the least, this is nonsense.

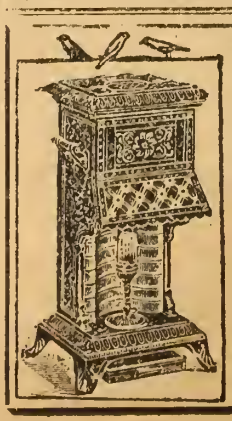
A Show Suggestion to Show Secretaries.



SIR,—I was sorry to read in CAGE BIRDS of June 25th of the Great Horton O.S. open show not being a success. It is really very discouraging. It is rather a mistake for several shows to be held on one date in the same town; one or the other is sure to suffer by it. As a true lover of the Fancy, I should like to give my opinion on shows to secretaries, although, no doubt, my idea will be ridiculed. Yet if made universal, I think in time it would work. First, I would propose, say, about 6d. each bird for entrance fee, with no prize money, only the usual honours as before, or two 1sts, two 2nds, two 3rds in each class of Canaries; admittance to the show, free; catalogues, 3d. At the close of the season, of course, special presentations could be given by secretaries to the highest honours of season's showing. Would this have a tendency to bring new fanciers out of the corner; more so when many of our shows are held in such respectable places as schoolrooms? One thing I can say honestly: I have personally known some of my acquaintances, whom I have endeavoured hard to induce to try their hand at many shows, but the entrance fee (1s. 6d. per cage) I fully believe had blighted their attempts at showing a few birds, apart from the trouble, of course, there always is in delivery and getting the birds back from the show, which entailed another odd shilling or two. However, it is only a suggestion on my part, and whether of any use or not, I have experienced the above facts; yet I never omit using all my influence or persuasion to get any beginner to try his hand who has not before made any attempt also to persuade him that visits to the show he will find very interesting and most useful.

JOHN H. JOWETT.

A New Society for Chopwell and District.

SIR,—In answer to "Derwent Lad," I would like to know if he never changes his mind, and if a man cannot please himself as to what he does? I think "Derwent Lad" must have been down-hearted when he saw the new Society started. As for being in the same place, I say he is wrong, for there are two miles distance between them, with a population of about 7,000. Now, what about the five societies on Tyneside with not more than five miles apart? Were those societies started to do one another harm? I say no, for there are men who are members of all the lot; and still there is room for more. I say this society was not got up to do harm, as "Derwent Lad" says; it was started to encourage the men of Chopwell who had the Fancy at heart, but would not go to Derwent Valley, as it was too far away. It was through a little dispute about members' prize money, and the chairman of the Derwent Valley C.B.S. getting up in a meeting and saying "let them all go; we can do without them if such members will not sacrifice their prize money for the good of the society." But, Sir, thirty shillings to another man's two-and six seems a great deal of difference, especially when one has to pay contributions after that. I say, try and keep members, and not drive them away. No members means no society. Now that the new society has got a fairly good start, we will be like the Scotch General, who said, "Let Glasgow flourish" I will say, "Let Chopwell flourish." We have fixed October 7th and 8th for our open show, and have appointed our judges for same.

A Quick Recovery.

SIR,—The advice given in the reply to my letter re Canary, I have not had to try. In the last issue of CAGE BIRDS Mr. Yates gave a cure for common cold, and as my other bird was ill only two days before dying, I thought I had better at once try this. So I took the bird out of the aviary (it was getting weak on its legs then), put it in a cage, and hung it just below the mantelpiece in front of the fire and gave it Mr. Yates' prescription. In the morning it had livened up, and was trying to sing again about tea-time. To-day his mate hatched three of her eggs, and as they were not in the nest I looked on the ground for them, and found only one, which a Thrush was trying to eat. Good luck for a start, eh? She is sitting on three Pied Wagtails' eggs now. The cock commenced singing about 4.30 this morning, and has not ceased for a longer interval than 15 minutes all day. Is it possible for it to injure itself by singing so much?

W. F. WILBEE.

[It is doubtful whether "too much singing" (if that be possible) would injure a bird: but a bird can be got into such rank (high) breeding condition that there is danger of a fit, or rupture of a blood vessel. Such occurrences are rare, however, and unmated birds are generally the ones to suffer.—EDITOR.]

A Border Fancier on the Way to New Zealand.

SIR,—June 24 saw a good fancier, Mr. Wm. Scott, of Chirnside, board the "Ionic," on his way to Kimuka, New Zealand. He was for over 20 years connected with Cage Bird section of the Chirnside Society, where he was mainly instrumental in extending the classification for his pet, the Border Fancy Canary. He was a pretty extensive breeder, and has bred some of the best Borders going in this day, which won for him numerous trophies. Then circumstances took him away into the country, where he was many miles from a station, and that was the means of curtailing his show career. But, being a keen fancier, a true Scot by name and nature, he stuck to his "little gems," and at the present time has the cream of his stock with him on board, bound for that far country where we hope they will make a name for themselves, and where we are sure his own services as a judge will be greatly in demand. With his long experience, I shall not be surprised when I read in CAGE BIRDS of his debut. We hope the good ship will carry its precious cargo safe to land, and although we were sorry to part with him (and here take the final shake), yet it must be, and we wish him and all the rest of his family God speed and success in their new home, for New Zealand is richer and Scotland is poorer by the removal of a true and good fancier.

Birds Biting Toes Off Their Young Ones.

SIR,—It was with interest I read letters recently from two of your readers concerning hens which eat the toes of their young. But I consider the case which I submit to your numerous readers to be of a worse nature, and I should be grateful to any of them if they could give me any explanation regarding it. This is my first season in taking up the interesting hobby of bird-rearing. I began by pairing off three sets of birds about the middle of last March, and each of them laid four eggs which were duly hatched. All went well until the ninth morning, when I discovered the toes of all the birds in one nest to be completely eaten off. However, I determined to give the same pair another chance to see the result. On this occasion I got five eggs, and when the time was drawing nigh for the birds to be hatched, I kept the pair under close observation. Entering my bird-room on the thirteenth morning I noticed the hen had something in her mouth, and on approaching the cage I was horrified to discover her devouring one of her young. I immediately examined the nest and found the dead carcasses of two other birds without head or toes, and another with the toes eaten off which, needless to say, I destroyed. I have often heard of cats eating their young, but I never read or heard of birds being guilty of such a crime. I wonder if any of your readers has had a like experience. Could it be possible, if this hen is the off-spring of a brother and sister (concerning which I cannot say), that this would account for her unnatural crime?

The Cage Bird Union and Its Future.

Yorkshire Union Arrives at Working Arrangement with the C.B.U.

SIR,—At the Council meeting of the Yorkshire Union, held June 25, with Mr. F. Hammond presiding over a good turn-up of delegates, correspondence which had passed between the Secretary and the Secretary of the Cage Bird Union, was placed before the Council, and this ultimately led to a working agreement with the Cage Bird Union on the same terms that the Yorkshire Union had submitted previously. A communication was read from Mr. G. W. F. Lythgoe to the effect that the Council of the C.B.U. would accept the terms as laid down by the Yorkshire Union, and this was accepted with much enthusiam. The terms of agreement are such as will allow members of the Cage Bird Union to show now at Yorkshire Union shows without fear of breaking the C.B.U. rules in doing so, and each Union decides to uphold all disqualifications incurred by members of the respective Unions. This agreement will, therefore, tend to weld more closely the interests of both bodies of members, and considerably strengthen the hold which both Unions have on the Fancy at large. One can only hope now that this working agreement is an accomplished fact, that all doubts will be cast away from us. Good work needs to be done to fight against outside forces which, to a certain extent, oppress our members. Railway grievances, for instance. The way exhibitors and also dealers who are constantly using the meagre facilities which the railways provide for the transit of birds, are dealt with is something abominable, and needs instant reform. No less than four cases have come before the Council during the last few months, and in each case, although legitimate means have been tried, the only result attained has been the customary offer of 5s. Two of these cases have been conclusively proved to be cases of theft during transit, and still this is the only consideration that the railway companies grant. Surely there is need for a deal of effort here in order that we can get a fair remuneration for the loss of our birds. The only advice I can give to exhibitors and dealers, until such times as some remedy is arrived at, is to insure the birds when sending them off, the cost being 3d. in the £. Many have proved that a deal more care is bestowed on birds that are insured.

H. HILL, Sec. Yorks. Union.

SIR,—I am now able to announce that an arrangement has been come to with the Yorkshire Union so that this body shall be treated as a contemporary Union, and their shows in future be open to Cage Bird Union members. I trust that those societies that have not rejoined because of this particular restraint, will now send on their subscriptions without further delay. The result of my circular letter to seceding societies is disappointing, in so far that only two have replied, one, Sunderland, reiterating their objection to Rule 22, the other stating they were not inclined to conform to the request for their reason for withdrawing. This is disappointiug, as we are still in the dark as to the causes of the secessions, and so unable to remedy the faults. The only other apparent tangible grievance, therefore, appears to be the objection to Rule 22, and several societies, though rejoining the Union, have written me that they would like this rule removed. Well, members have always had this entirely in their own hands; the rule has been debated upon, and after voting it has been decided to retain it. Still, if the majority are now of opinion it is unworkable, and that the Union would be better without it, it is for the members to say that the rule shall be dropped. I venture to think, however, that fanciers would be standing in their own light by doing so. Such a rule is needed for their own protection, and for putting the Union into a position of authority, and no one has come forward with any new scheme or any better rule for attaining these ends. After the failure of the two or three previous attempts at establishing a National governing body, it was obvious some new method of getting a number of societies to form a Union was necessary, and when this rule was proposed it was taken up with enthusiasm, even in its originally more stringent form. Bear in mind the large number of societies which did agree to combine to form the Union, and did so with the full knowledge of the meaning of the rule; this fact appears to have been lost sight of. It was not a case of first forming a Union and then springing this rule upon the Fancy to coerce other societies to come in. It ought to be the first thought of every fancier to support a Union having such objects as this has in view, none of which could be attained without a powerful body to see them carried ont; and what weight would a few societies have in approaching railway companies and other bodies? As Mr. Thos. Robson says, combined action is required, and a weak Union which cannot control practically all societies is a farce, and, further, that this rule is necessary because to be a real Union we must all join. Now, without this rule, even with the small subscription of 2d. per annum, fanciers would have held aloof. And does anybody seriously believe that more than a few societies would have joined any Union, however good its objects and capable its officials? If so, why did not the other Unions succeed, which had practically the same objects as the present one? So it became a question of forming quickly a representative and influential Union. Some one has mentioned the Poultry Club as a good example. I do not know when this club was formed, but I think it has taken a considerable number of years to attain its present position; and no doubt other stronger influences were at work than obtain in the Cage Bird Fancy. I contend that the C.B.U. attained in twelve months a position that would have taken as many years of labour and struggling against criticism and prejudice without such a rule, even if it had not followed the early fate of the other Unions through lack of support. Mixed shows particularly have been the cause of constant complaint anent the treatment meted ont to exhibits and exhibitors. Fanciers do not need reminding of the many ways these shows are often unsatisfactory. They could not be expected to affiliate, and yet would any of them have licensed themselves under the Union? How, then, would it be possible to protect the interests of Cage Bird exhibitors, and yet these shows to conform to the demand for better treatment for their section than by such a rule? If there is a better way, we would be glad of suggestions. It is not the rule that is at fault, but the members themselves, by not loyally observing it, and by not backing up the Union in reporting the cases of its infringement which came under notice. If this had been done, all causes of dissatisfaction would soon have been removed, from the fact that practically every show in the country would have come under the Union. Societies, too, have not supported the rules. One instance is well known. Another society, though affiliated, yet allowed its Secretary to resign (?) annually, so that he might exhibit at a few pet shows outside the Union, and still this resigned member always came up and managed their show and exhibited as a member. Now, what objections have been brought against the rule, beyond the cries of "coercion" and "restriction of liberty"? No other arguments have been brought against it, except that of inconsistence in not also putting a bar on non-members. But are we not coerced in every walk of life for the good of the general body, and does not a trades, or other union, if it wishes to become of any strength, and capable of enforcing its demands, make most stringent rules for its members to observe? Even the restriction of liberty would have disappeared in a very short time when every show had come into line; then, when the Union was numerically in a position to dictate, would have been the time to drop the rule. But this restriction is exaggerated. In 1908 only a very few purely cage bird shows were held outside the Union, and some 80 mixed shows were open to our members. So where does the hardship come in in not being able to show where one likes, when considerably over 200 shows, practically all in the country, at any rate confined to cage birds, were open to Union members? On the question of inconsistency, I admit the rule is one-sided, and it was never intended to be as it is. One writer suggests that the Union, to be a national success, should also prevent any non-member from exhibiting at Union shows, and to meet this to drop the private member's fee to 1s. This is exactly what was in the original proposition, but this part was overruled on account of the Palace Show. Another suggestion is for all C.B.U. members to show where they like and debar non-members from exhibiting at Union shows. In this the question of inconsistency would crop up on the other side; and again, societies would soon drop ont of the Union when they found by doing so they commanded the entries of non-members as well as those of members of the Union; and this rule would not help us at all with the mixed shows. I have tried to show how necessary such a rule was in order to quickly form a National Union, and also that without one, societies would drop out, the Union would soon dwindle down to a few, and so become ineffective. I have carefully studied all the correspondence, but have been unable to find any alternative suggestion by which societies could better be induced to join a Union. But whatever rule might be found, this nor any other could never be operative if not loyally supported by the members. Mr. T. Robson (Newcastle) suggests that members of the Specialist Clubs should also be affiliated, or, if not, debarred from offering their specials at C.B.U. shows. Many of them though not affiliated, have acted on the principle of only giving their patronage to Union shows, but I agree they ought to be affiliated. I also agree with Mr. Robson in asking the Newcastle district to call a meeting to suggest any means of improving the Union. Mr. Crawhall somewhere expresses himself as having given great thought to the reconstruction of the Union. Not a single one of the London societies is now affiliated, and not one has given the slightest inkling as to why not. I throw out the suggestion that the London societies and the Newcastle district also should hold meetings, and if there are any grounds for dissatisfaction with the rules or the management of the Union, send up their recommendations; if it is a question of faulty management, I believe, without exception, any of the present officers would be quite willing to give way to other officials being elected in their places. I further quote Mr. Robson, who says societies should send in their objections, so that all obstacles to their becoming members may be removed as far as possible, and I again appeal to societies to do so. A National Union can work so much better, and be of far more weight, than two or three in the country. Mr. MacPartling's suggestion to form a central, or local committee, to hold frequent meetings, is a good one. The expense of calling meetings of the Council, £10 or £12 for each, is a great drain on the funds, and such a central committee should be useful as an Emergency Committee if the members would accept it, and not afterwards pass remarks, as have already been expressed, that the Union is governed by a clique of local men, though the Council is constituted of representatives from every corner of the country. In Mr. Maggs' letter, appearing in your columns some time ago, he asks: Is it not possible to have a ruling body in the Cage Bird Fancy based on the freedom and goodwill of members? I doubt it, as witness the previous attempts to form a Union. The items he sets out as being done by the Poultry Club have all been effected also by the C.B.U.—matters such as non-payment of prize money and fraudulent preparation of exhibits have not, as he suggests, taken a back seat to breaches of the Rule 22; they have not been so prominent simply because they have not been of such frequent occurrence. He says the Poultry Club sees that classes should not be amalgamated or cancelled, that winners get their prize money, and that it provides legal assistance, as well as the provision of a "black list"—these are all points that the C.B.U. has undertaken. Nor does the Union interfere with the management of shows, except so far as clashing of dates is concerned, which is considered in the Cage Bird Fancy as very necessary, and even in this the greatest latitude is allowed, and all societies are given every facility for retaining recurring dates. Now it is, I think, generally agreed by all that a Union is a necessity, and can be of real benefit to the Fancy, and if the present one has weak places, let societies that have observed such send in their suggestions for strengthening them.

A Pugnacious Robin.

A friend of mine once had a model of a Robin, and she put it on the mantelpiece near the window. Every morning she used to find it knocked down. So one day she watched to see what knocked it down. When she had waited for some time she saw a Robin come in at the window, hop on to the mantelpiece, and fight the model of the Robin, knocking it over. Then it flew away.—Sent by Harold Tunbridge (age 14), Netherott, St. Marks, Cheltenham.

*Birds' Christmas Sheaf.

As I was walking through a field one day in winter (it was about December 24), I saw a man fastening a pole on the roof of a barn, and at the end of the pole was a sheaf of corn. I asked him what was it good for, and he told me that he liked to see the birds having a merry Christmas as well as men. I went there on Christmas, and I watched carefully, and the grandest thing I saw was a group of Chaffinches enjoying themselves to the Christmas feast.—Sent by John Davies (age 14), 29, Gormon Street, Carnarvon, N.W.

*Some Birds' Nests.

The Skylark's nest among the grass,
And waving corn is found;
The Robin builds on a shady bank
With oak leaves strewed around;
The Wren builds in an ivy thorn,
Or old and ruined wall;
The Cuckoo builds no nest at all,
But through the wood she strays
Until she finds a nest of hay,
And there her eggs she lays.

Enclosed is a sketch of an idea which I think will be very useful to Linnet contest singers and those keeping Linnets in contest cages. SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1910 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Bangor and District C.B.S.

We are doing well with breeding here; plenty of Hybrids and Mules being got. The weather has been bad for breeding lately—any amount of thunder and very heavy rains. Bird nests in the country have suffered severely. I see many young lying drowned in the nest.—JOHN P. WATSON, secretary.

Over the Border.

Mr. J. Smith (Coldstream), last year's noted novice exhibitor, has had a grand season, and has one or two gems on the sticks, having reared over 30 Borders, and also some nice Goldfinch Mules. Mr. Aikman, the enthusiastic hybrid breeder, has had fair luck, having two Twite-Siskins in the nest, and a large number of British hens down on eggs. Messrs. Dickson Bros., the Norwich breeders, have a good collection doing for themselves, 25, and still they come. Another novice, Mr. A. Carmichael, who only had one pair of Borders up, reared three youngsters, two of these even marks, and one of them the best seen for years, splendid markings and shape, which should win. Other fanciers, Messrs. Gilchrist, Duncan, and Bruce, are doing well. Mr. G. Ford this year has only one pair up, devoting all his time to British and foreign.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

A meeting of the Council of the Yorkshire Union was held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, on June 25th, Mr. F. Hammond (president) occupying the chair. A good turn up of delegates was recorded. In the case of a defaulting member of the Manningham C.B.A. the Council decided to call upon him to pay up all arrears owing up to date. The National Green-marked Y.C.C. asked for permission to use the Union's standard of points to print in their yearly handbook, and this was granted. Hebden Bridge and Calder Valley O.S. were admitted as members, thus making the total membership higher now than at any period in the history of the Union. I feel sure, on behalf of the Council, that I can wish them every success under the new regime, and sincerely trust that it will be the means of strengthening their society in every respect. The Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C. asked for the cheapest terms in order to print their various competitions in the Union handbook, and the Council decided that they should pay the ordinary rate. The Great Horton Good Intent Society asked the Council to allow them to extend their entries for the annual show to the Wednesday, instead of Tuesday, as the Christmas holidays were likely to interfere to some extent, and this request was granted. The printing of the Union Handbook it was eventually decided to give to Fur and Feather, Idle. All matter intended for the Union Handbook must be in my hands by July 14th, or it will be too late for insertion; this is the date for closing of advertisements. Also any members of the Union who have removed since they gave their addresses to the secretary of the society they are members of, will do well to notify me at once by P.C. in order that the new address may be published in the book. Secretaries of societies who are printing their schedule of annual show in the Union Handbook should let me have particulars of classification, etc., at the earliest opportunity, after the specialist clubs have granted their patronage. Please make a note of July 14th, secretaries, advertisers, and members generally.—H. HILL, secretary.

In the Courts.

Thrushes, etc., Near London.

At Woolwich Police Court, on June 23rd, before Mr. Hutton, James Ware and Alfred Howden were summoned for unlawfully using nets for the purpose of taking wild birds. A police witness said the defendants had several Blackbirds and Thrushes. Mr. Hutton, on examining the schedule of birds given in the Act found (according to "The Times" report) that Blackbirds and Thrushes were under the heading of "Protected birds," under which section he had power only to reprimand the defendants on a first offence, and to order the payment of costs. It was most extraordinary, he observed, that Blackbirds and Thrushes were not scheduled birds, for they were beautiful singing birds. It was then suggested that a magistrate had power to order that the nets should be destroyed, but on again examining the Act Mr. Hutton found that he could order the destruction of the nets only on a conviction. He did not think that the reprimand and order for the payment of costs would count as a "conviction" in this case, but eventually he decided to consider the question of the nets, and give his decision in a week's time. He regretted being compelled to let the men off so lightly, and warned them that if they came before him again he would inflict the maximum penalty.

BATTERSEA OPEN C.B.S.

The annual show of Canaries in their nest feathers and of British birds was held on June 18th, at the Society's headquarters, 340, Battersea Park Road, London, S.W. Mr. Easterling, the sec., and the society, were deserving of a better entry in their efforts to popularise open classes at young bird shows. The entries were not as numerous as they might have been, but there were many grand quality birds among those staged, especially in the Yorkshire classes. The British bird class, with ten entries, contained some capital birds. The general arrangements for the comfort both of the birds and of the visitors, together with the pretty appearance of the showroom, redounded to the credit of Mr. Easterling, the indefatigable secretary, Mr. W. J. Honeysett, the chairman, and the other helpers. Mr. Robson judged.

Members' first Nest Feather show held at headquarters on June 2nd. Only 45 entries were received, many of the members having had a very poor breeding season. The champion Crest, Crest-bred, Cinnamon, Border Fancy, and Mule classes had to be cancelled, but we are hoping for a better entry at the second show in July. Mr. Derry secured special for best novice Norwich, Mr. Stookes for best novice Crest, while Mr. Kidner (a novice) won that for best Yorkshire, and also for most points in novice Yorkshire classes. WEST BROMWICH & DIS. C.B.S.

The first of a series of nest feather shows was held on June 21st, and there were a good number of members, but only a few visitors, present. Mr. Key, our president, Judged the Yorkshires, and Mr. A. Broadhurst (chairman of the Birmingham Society) the remaining classes; both gave great satisfaction. The judging was over in good time, and there was very little the matter with the awards. A very hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the judges for their able adjudicating. Mr. Broadhurst congratulated our members upon the advanced stage of their youngsters, and only hoped they would be able to maintain the standard.

CREWE AND DISTRICT O.S.

First feather show, held in the Co-operative Hall, on June 18th. The room is well adapted for the purpose, being well lighted, and ventilated, without draught. The society are fortunate in securing the services of Mr. T. L. Haneocks, Secretary, and Mr. J. C. Heaton, Asst. Secretary, together with the chairman, and a good working committee, who know the business of running a show successfully. The show numerically was not quite as strong as last year, owing to the fact that several fanciers had a most disastrous first round, but some very promising youngsters were staged. Mr. T. Harrison (Altrincham) officiated as judge, entire satisfaction being given by his awards.

Fourth annual young bird show, held June 25th, and was well attended by visitors and friends, among whom we noticed Messrs. Brougn, Gorton and Jamieson (Bury), J. Dewhirst, and Adams (Rochdale). During the evening an interesting event took place. Our President, Mr. J. Percy, in a few well-chosen words, called upon Councillor R. D. McMurdo, of British bird fame, to hand our challenge cup to the winner, Mr. R. Schofield, who scored the highest number of points with three birds. Mr. J. WESTERN COUNTIES O.S. (Plymouth).

The second nest feather show was held at Boro' Restaurant, on June 22nd, when over 100 birds were staged. Crests and Norwich numbered more than half of this total. Yorkshire fanciers are lagging behind this year, and the Britishers were not so good as at previous shows. Mules show an improvement. The feature of the June show was the winning Crest, a grand clear body, of good size, with an immense dark crest, a very promising bird indeed, for which his breeder (Mr. Coath), who is a novice, refused a substantial offer at the show. Mr. Dyer judged Yorkshires, Mr. Border Norwich, Mr. Hoar Crests and Crest-breds, Mr. Clark any other varieties and Mules, and Mr. Snell British and Foreign.

QUEEN'S PARK C.B.A.

This show was held at the Emmanuel Hall, Harrow Road, W., on June 25th, was a most successful little affair, the entries being in excess of last year, whilst the quality, especially in the Yorkshire section, was very good. In the champion Norwich, Mr. J. Lethbridge put down a nice team, and won the special with a very neat yellow. The novices made a good show, the birds of Messrs. Bown, Baker, J. Lethbridge, and Warwick being very nice in quality, and of good type. Messrs. Hawes Bros. put down a capital team in the champion Yorkshire classes, as did Mr. Creamer in the amateurs, and the latter gentleman not only won the section special, but also the special for the best bird in the show by the aid of a remarkably stylish variegated yellow. This gentleman secured 1, 2, 3 in this class, with a trio of birds all from one nest. A champion nest indeed. The novice Yorkshires were two strong classes, and some very smart, shapely birds were staged by Messrs. Lloyd, Lawrence, Birch, Coleman, Baker, and Hannaford. British made a nice show, the special for the section falling to a very nicely marked rich coloured Chaffinch, shown by Mr. Bassett. Messrs. Baker, Lawrence, and Lewis acted as stewards, and attended well to the requirements of the exhibits, while Mr. J. C. Birch, the esteemed and popular secretary, had all the details well in hand. Mr. C. A. House judged.

One of our first feather shows, held on June 25th, at club room, Red Lion Hotel. Mr. J. Greaves (Bradford) judged, and gave satisfaction to all. The entries did not turn up as expected, but the quality of the exhibits staged was of a very high order, and no doubt with a good moult some of them will be heard of again. Special for best bird in show was won by Mr. A. Pratt, with his unevenly mkd. Buff Yorks, a very promising youngster.

STOCKTON HEATH & DIS. O.S.

First feather show held on June 25th in Mr. Moore's (chemist) studio, which is well adapted for this purpose. The quality of the exhibits was exceptional throughout. The Yorkshires led by one over the Norwich. Mr. J. Griffiths had a team of Yorkshires which were hard to separate; the first was a cap-marked yellow, followed by clear yellow. Mr. E. Harper was the winner in the buffs; the second and third belonged to Mr. J. Bretherton. The Norwich were a nice lot. Mr. J. Leach's winning yellow is a fine, bouncing bird; it was pressed hard by the second. The buffs were quite on a par with their Yorkshire friends. The birds worthy of mention here were Mr. Weston's team of first and third, the second being the property of Mr. J. Collins, which must have pressed winner hard. We thank Mr. J. Guy for the able way in which he carried out his judging, giving satisfaction throughout. No doubt friend Guy will have the pleasure of another visit, as the members intend to leave no stone unturned in making this society second to none. There were upwards of 40 birds staged.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Nest Feather and British Bird Show held June 25th in the Friends School, Prospect-road, Heeley. The attendance might perhaps have been better, but considering the very wet day it was good. Altogether 155 birds were staged, making a very fine show. The Yorkshires, as usual, were first in point of numbers; amongst them were some real good birds, the winners having grand length and nicely drawn bodies. Special for best Yorkshire went to Mr. F. Jones with a nice cinnamon-marked buff; Mr. A. Lawton won the special for best novice Yorkshire. Special for best Crest or Crest-bred was won by Mr. J. Crookes with a very good Crest. Special mention might be made of Mr. A. Hobson's clear Buff Norwich, which won special for best Norwich, also special for best Canary; it is a very fine youngster with plenty of substance and good quality. Mr. Hobson also won special for best novice Norwich, and that for most points. Mr. P. Walsh got special for best British in show with a fine Linnet (10 years old); where British are concerned he will take some stopping. Mr. G. Browning (Rotherham) judged.

ROCHDALE (Good Intent) C.B.S.

First feather show (34th annual), held June 18th, at Temperance Club, Toad Lane. It is with pleasure I once again am able to give our late show a good account. Some of us have only one or two birds as yet, but the members who have had more rallied round, and helped to once again make our show come up to its usual high standard. Some grand birds were staged, some of which will no doubt be heard of again. As usual, and being again favoured with grand weather, we had a very good attendance of visitors and friends. Ours being the first show in the district, fanciers eagerly await our show to see the youngsters. Mr. H. W. Battye (Huddersfield) judged, and gave satisfaction all round. About 80 birds were staged. Mr. J. Lees won the society's challenge cup and gold medal, Mr. E. Faulkner winning the special for runner-up. Mr. A. Beatill won gold locket for best bird, with a grand Lancs. BARRINGTON, ETC., SOCIAL CLUB C.B.S.

Annual Nest Feather show held at headquarters on June 25th, and was a huge success. Forty-seven birds faced the judge, Mr. J. Wilson (Bedlington), in seven classes, and his awards gave every satisfaction. Some promising youngsters were on view which will be heard of again. The showroom was tastefully decorated by the steward, Mr. Rutter, with ferns and other plants. I noticed Messrs. Curry and Holden, of Newcastle and Gateshead, amongst the visitors. CAGE BIRDS posters were in the room and on the outside door, and no doubt this led to having a very successful "gate."

First Feather show held on June 25th, at headquarters, Black Dog, Watergate. There was a nice turn-up of Norwich and novice Yorkshires. Competition was very good. Britishers did not turn up as well as was expected, but those on view were a very nice lot, all the awards going to Mr. Parsons except those for the Any Variety Hardbill; Mr. Lockton won in this class with the best British in show, a splendid Yellowhammer.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

The first of the two young bird shows to be held during the summer took place on June 23rd at headquarters, Lavender Hill. There was a capital entry, especially in the class for novice Yorkshires. The competition was keen, and a double set of winners might easily have been selected. In clears, Mr. J. King stood first, with a grand long-sided bird, closely followed by Messrs. W. Walker and F. J. Tibles. Special for best bird went to F. J. Martin's yellow Norwich, a bird of exceptional size and quality. Given a good moult, this bird should hold his own later. The runner-up was a fine, leggy Yorkshire, with good head and wings, exhibited by Mr. C. Mabey. The "wee gems" did not muster very strongly. Mrs. G. Harwood secured the special with a very typical, tight-feather buff. The members generally have not had a very good season, but the quality is undoubtedly far in advance of last year's, and with a good moult some fine specimens should be staged in the autumn. Mr. H. Norman judged, and was agreeably surprised at the all-round excellence of the youngsters.

This is a standard work, written by an acknowledged expert, and prepared for publication by experts. It has been designed as an authoritative and carefully practical work, embodying in the simplest and most straightforward language all that there is to be known on the peculiarly difficult and scientific subject of Hybrid Breeding.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID—not a pretty group suitable for a child's picture-book, but a plate that shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present-day type and general characteristics of modern hybrids.

A PRACTICAL BOOK FOR PRACTICAL FANCIERS.

It will, we feel sure, be generally conceded that "Cage Birds" has produced in "CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS" a dignified book on a difficult subject—a standard work of the highest merit and a fitting monument of the hybrid breeder's art.

"G. E. H., Esq., June 28th, 1910, to B.H. Dear Sir,—Birds to hand, with thanks. I have tried well over 20 firms of bird dealers, and yours is but the second from whom I have had complete satisfaction, and also businesslike methods of answering per return. The other dealer whom I trusted kept his birds in such warm quarters, that I did not like to get them from him. Your prices are strictly moderate. I am very pleased with the birds you sent to-day also. H. J., Esq., London, to B. H.,—I received the birds at 10 o'clock this morning, and are none the worse for journey. I did not expect to get such a specimen pair of birds for the price; it is quite evident you know how to keep customers. I am sending you another order shortly. I went to a large firm in London, and they asked me 4/6 for a pair that were in a fearful state. I may say a friend of mine in London recommended me to send to you as he is very pleased." Club Reports.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE & DIS. C.B.S.

At the usual monthly meeting there was a large turn-out of members. After the usual business, we made all necessary preparations for the forthcoming first feather show. We also signed a contract for more up-to-date stands for annual show. The question of putting classes on annual schedule for Cinnamons, Lizards, and Scotch Fancy, were left over till next meeting.—G. HAYVER, Sec.

CLAPHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Final meeting held on July 4th, at the Avondale Hotel, for the Young Bird and Finch Show, July 9th. A full classification for Finches and Canaries was voted for. The specials, as usual, were well maintained, and by the schedule being sent out, members will find a number of valuable prizes not usual for young bird First Feather Shows. It is hoped by the secretary that members will make a good entry, and compete for these specials, to ensure a further success. Entries to be at the Hall, Landor-road, Clapham, by 3 o'clock; open to fanciers and public at 6 o'clock. Judge for Canaries, Mr. W. H. Vale; for British birds, Mr. S. A. Sandy.—A. C. ASKEW, Sec.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED Y.C.C

Committee meeting held July 2nd, at 5.30 p.m., at the Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. W. M. Shackleton (president) in the chair. Business: Moved: "That the minutes of previous meeting be passed as a correct record"; "That the following gentlemen be admitted members of the club from this date:—Messrs. S. Smith (Stone Chair Shelf), J. W. and E. Middleton (Keighley), S. B. Grayshon (Heckmondwike), F. Smith (Allerton), and L. Dykes (Bolton Woods)"; moved "That the tenders for handbooks be considered first irrespective of price." Eventually it was decided to accept the lowest tender of Mr. L. Hodgson, Bradford. After very careful consideration, and on account of dates of judges clashing, one or two prominent clubs had to be passed over; the patronage was granted to the Crystal Palace, Gt. Horton, and London C.B.A., which completes the list of club shows. A hearty vote of thanks to the donors of specials was unanimously accorded to Mr. J. W. Ramsden, Mr. T. Sandiford, and Messrs. Sutcliffe and Sons.—J. ARMSTRONG, Sec.

STIRLING AND DISTRICT O.S.

Monthly meeting held July 4th, in the Douglas Hotel, Mr. Summers presiding. After a deal of discussion, it was decided to have four prize model cards for each class for annual show. Our judges this year are:— Messrs. J. McLay (Kirkintilloch), and C. Campbell (Glasgow). Next meeting 30th July. Will all outside members please note change of secretary, and send all communications to me?—WM. BISHOP, 140, Main Street, St. Ninians, Stirling.

PLUMSTEAD & WOOLWICH C.B.S.

General meeting held at headquarters, Trinity Schools, June 28, a very good number of members being present. In the absence of the chairman, Mr. Newnham was asked to preside. A letter was read from Mr. Best tendering, for business reasons, his resignation, which was accepted with great regret. Mr. Pawley and Mr. Newnham having resigned the position of joint secretaries, Mr. H. Dibley and Mr. Meades were elected, their address being 68, Griffin Road, Plumstead.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Meeting held June 30, Mr. J. Curry in the chair. The following were admitted members:—Messrs. M. C. Potts (Heaton), Renwicks (Bassenthwaite Lake), and Johnson (Newcastle). A long correspondence was read from Mr. Douglas (Whitehaven) re specials, and after considerable discussion, Mr. Douglas's proposal was carried: "That the medals this season be given for most points with three highest birds in champion section, two highest in novice section." One member can only win one medal per season. It is hoped this will overcome the difficulty which has occurred in previous seasons when mistakes have occurred in judging for best bird, and will not be a hardship on the small exhibitor.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Sec.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE (H.-in.-H.)

The members had a most enjoyable time on June 27, at headquarters, the Old House at Home, Wellingborough Road. Following dinner a smoking concert was held. Mr. W. H. Butlin, Hon. Vice-Consul for Spain, presided, and was supported by Alderman W. Tomes and Councillor F. C. Parker. After a few apt remarks from the chairman, Mr. W. E. Allen proposed the toast of "The President and Vice-Presidents," coupling with it the names of Alderman Tomes, Councillor Parker, Mr. Booth, and others. Councillor Parker apologised for the absence of Mr. A. J. Darnell. He said he had found by experience that those who loved dumb creatures at heart made good citizens, and were always ready to lend a helping hand to the needy. Alderman Tomes trusted the time was not far distant when they would have the pleasure of seeing aviaries erected in parks, for it would give pleasure to thousands of people. Mr. G. Sergeant gave a much appreciated paper on "Ten years with British birds." The programme was contributed to by Mr. W. Swallow, Mr. T. Brooks, and the Carne Bros. Mr. Godball presided at the piano. The arrangements were made by the following committee:—Mr. W. E. Allen (chairman), Mr. J. Fisher (vice-chairman), Mr. W. Munday, Mr. H. Baron, Mr. W. Jeyes, Mr. W. Stockwin, Mr. W. Tabor, and Mr. A. W. Law (secretary).

HIGHGATE & HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting held June 30, at headquarters, when the members were entertained by a lecture on "Colour Feeding," by Mr. J. W. Ramsden. A ramble was arranged for Saturday, July 16th. Mr. J. Hyde, the assistant secretary, has kindly undertaken to arrange matters, and members wishing to go must give their names to him on July 9th at young stock show. The secretary informed the members that one of their members had sailed for Australia, namely, Mr. J. J. Dawes, and it was the wish of all members present to send him a message through CAGE BIRDS, which the secretary is sending out to him, with our reports. The best message we could think of was: "Good Luck" and "God Speed." The secretary passed a few remarks on the working of the society now that half the year had gone. He said that there were some 80 paying members, but, of course, we must expect to lose some before the year was out, as several had not yet paid up. There have been 16 new members in the six months. The balance in hand is something over £10, so that the society is flourishing. The assistant secretary, Mr. J. Hyde, was in the chair, and read a small paper on the cultivation of the capsicum. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed a very interesting and enjoyable evening.—CHAS. W. LAW, Hon. Sec.

YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

Committee meeting held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, July 2nd, Mr. Sunderland in the chair. It was decided that the junior novice competition be competed for at all Yorkshire Union shows, and in addition to the £5 offered for competition, the "novice" is eligible to compete for the 3rd, 4th, and 5th prize specials, at the Union shows, where the club's open competitions are granted. That the printing of the Club's handbook be let by tender, and, all societies gaining the club's patronage are required to print the conditions of competition in the schedules. The following new members were enrolled:—Messrs. J. H. Whitwham, J. H. Jowett, B. Wood, J. H. Fowle, H. Smith, J. Aldersou, W. H. Dibb, J. Northrop, S. Morley, J. Morley, F. Wharton, W. Wharton, W. Battye, and J. H. Ackroyd. I would here impress upon all intending members the advisability of sending in their names and addresses for inclusion in the club's handbook, which will be published shortly. The following is a list of the successful applicants for the club's patronage:—The Bailey Trophy Competition, City of Bradford, Bolton and District O.S., Bradford (West), Liverpool, Great Horton, Windhill, Gateshead, Bradford (East), Scottish National, and Crystal Palace (Ramsden cup, money specials, and novice competition), Burnley, Shipley O.S., Newcastle-on-Tyne, Manchester, Eccleshill, Harrogate, Halifax, Queensbury, Skelmanthorpe, and Crystal Palace. — JOHN GREAVES, Secretary, 279, Hollings Road, Bradford.

BANKFOOT AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held June 28th, Mr. H. Taylor (vice-president) in the chair. Arrangements were made for our "char-a-bane" drive to Ilkley, via. Denton Park, on Saturday, August 6th. Sufficient names were given in at this meeting to more than fill the first "char-a-bane." Therefore, those desirous of joining, would do well to send in their names as soon as possible, so that final arrangements may be made at our next meeting on July 26th. The fare will be 2/6, children up to six or seven years of age may go free, provided they are in charge of adults. It is hoped that as many as possible will avail themselves of the special facilities. Several more specials were promised for competition at our members' shows. Specials for the best cock, and best hen, at each of our old bird shows, were kindly given by Mr. H. Kershaw, Mr. J. Taylor, and Mr. H. Taylor. In connection with our proposed joint members' show with Wibsey, a meat-pie supper will be given, free of charge, to all exhibitors, non-exhibitors, 6d. each, the whole of such proceeds to be divided between the two societies, and given as specials at this show. The idea, as no doubt will be guessed, is to install a friendly feeling between these two neighbouring societies, so that the work of each society may be carried out in a smooth and unbiassed manner. A novel feature at our last show of the year will be a competition for our members' wives and lady friends, in which blouse lengths will be given as prizes. No doubt this will serve to strengthen the interests of our lady friends. Our next members' show will be July 23rd, and the judge, Mr. R. Halliday (Ripley). Fanciers desirous of joining should give in their names and addresses to any of our members. This will enable them to exhibit at our next show. A special competition will be provided at the last show for members who have not won a 1st prize in a full class throughout the year. Mr. E. W. Johnson, our worthy president, has promised a really valuable prize for this competition, as has also Mr. H. Taylor. All members exhibiting in this class, and not winning either of the prizes, will count all points gained throughout the year, and receive a prize from our long list of specials, from which every exhibitor will benefit. Messrs. Myers and Lightowler were added to our list of members, and this brought a very interesting evening to a close.—F. GILDER (Secretary).

BOURNEMOUTH & DIS. C.B.A.

Meeting held at headquarters, June 28th, Mr. G. W. Jones in the chair. It was decided not to hold the usual monthly meeting in July, and that the young bird show on the programme for 13th July be abandoned on account of the centenary fetes. Arrangements were made for a stroll into the country by the members on the afternoon of July 27th. It is hoped all members wishing to take part in the outing will notify the hon. sec. at once.—W. O. BROOKE, Hon. Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting held at Rochdale, July 2nd, the Rochdale O.S. kindly finding one of their rooms for the purpose. As far as numbers go, the meeting was a disappointment, and the fact that breeding is in full swing, scarcely excuses all failing to turn up. We had a fairly heavy agenda to go through, many points of interest being discussed. Applications were received from Manchester, Nottingham, and L.C.B.A., and it was decided to give all three our patronage for both Lancashires and Lizards. It was decided that the Toronto medals be given at our club show to be held at Hyde on a date yet to be fixed, when we hope to have a good show, and some grand specials. The club show this year will be restricted to members of the L. and L.F.A. It is pleasing to hear that some of our members are doing well with their breeding; but others are doing very badly. Messrs. A. Bosworth and W. Bacon are doing very well, especially the first-named, who bids fair to have a house full soon. Will all societies desirous of our patronage (which must consist of four classes for Lancashires and four for Lizards—not necessarily to give classes to both varieties) let me have applications as early as possible, so I can put same before our next meeting at the Old Boar's Head, Manchester, on August 6th, when all applications will be considered? Members please note that subscriptions are due, and I shall be pleased to receive same as early as possible. Mr. G. Fitton, Oldham, was proposed as a member. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. J. Swalwell, who acted as chairman, concluded the meeting.—JOHN RUKIN, Hon. Sec.

THE DANGER TO THE BRITISH BIRD FANCY.

Some Interesting Expressions of Opinion.

SIR,—I have been a bird catcher for this last twelve years, and I think it would be far better if all bird catchers were licensed; then there would be more care taken of the birds when caught, and it would stop the majority of bird snarers who are ignorant as to the feeding and management of newly-caught birds. —W. B.

SIR,—I quite agree that some catchers are at fault. I see in CAGE BIRDS that someone speaks of 90 per cent. dying out of 100 Goldfinches. Now, I think such people as would do this could be stopped if we catchers were licensed (within the working man's reach). No catcher need let Goldfinches die if he looks after them properly. I have not lost one this last five years. What I do is, as soon as the thistles are ripe and begin to blow I start gathering the heads. I gather as many as I can, so that I have as much seed as I require before I start catching, which is after the first week in September. You have no trouble with Goldfinches when you have plenty of thistle seed, as they will start feeding as soon as you put them in the cage. I think the catcher should have the privilege of using the small cage in winter; he could not carry big cages out to catch with. I also think that if catchers would stop bracing birds there would be no need for any society, or the police to trouble them.—B. H.

SIR,—I have been a Linnet catcher this last 28 years. The best way to keep them alive when newly-caught is not to overcrowd them, and to put them in a low store cage or catching box. I myself generally use catch boxes 22 inches long by 11 inches wide, by 3 inches high. To keep the birds in a low cage is the best, as they have not the chance to flutter against one another. I see there are certain persons that object to this low cage system, but if they were in this part of the country, when they have to travel, say, from 20 to 30 miles, they would find they had to have something that does not take up much space, as a full catching kit wants carrying. I have seen what I call "amateur" catchers out, and they have been in the field all day, and the birds that they have caught have not had a drink of water. Now new-caught birds require water. If left without (especially young birds) they will die in a few hours, and then the amateur wants to know "what has killed them." To keep them alive they must have water from the first bird to the last. I have carried Linnets in these low boxes the distance I mentioned above without having a single dead bird, and under a scorching sun, and not one hundred, but thousands. The birds, however, were watered every few miles on the road, and that is the reason. It is through being without water that so many die. I agree with the proposed license, as I think it would do away with a lot of "amateurs," and anyone found catching without a license should be fined; and the license should be marked "Not transferable."—P. B.

SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the letter in your issue of June 25th, signed "Friend of the Birds," and also the remarks from various persons present at the great gathering organised by the N.B.B. and M.C. I note the remarks made by Mr. Dennithorne with regard to the rich landowners, refusing to allow a poor man to set foot on his land, even if the land was what one would term waste land. Well, there is just this about it: a man asks a landowner for permission to go on the waste or uncultivated portion of his land, in order to catch a few birds, and the landowner says, yes. This man is not contented with catching some birds, but he manages to bag some rabbits or a hare, or may probably kill a pheasant; at any rate, he means to have something more than the birds. This we will say, becomes known to the landowner. Another man, a genuine honest man, who is satisfied and pleased with just catching a few birds, asks for permission and is refused at once; and so is every other person that asks, no matter who he may be. If he mentions birds, he is "tarred with the same brush." Now, even if these rich landowners are among those who want to take away from naturalists (or call them "bird fanciers") their study of British birds in captivity, then, I say, supposing some law was passed to stop these rich people from enjoying their sports, depriving them of their rights, stopping their fox-hunting and their shooting, etc., taking away from them those things which they love and enjoy, and are interested in, and which they would miss terribly—put the boot on the other leg, and try to stop them, and you would very soon find these gentlemen bustling about signing a huge petition to get the "unjust" law, or stigma, removed.

That is, gentlemen, exactly how we feel about our own case, and that is what we want and intend to do.

With regard to the cruelty of shooting and hunting, I think we have quite as much right to point out to these people the cruel side of their sports, as they have to point out where the alleged cruel part of bird-keeping comes in. Not that for a moment I should like to see their sport taken from them; on the contrary, I have lived in the country all my life (or practically all my life), and have been to shoots and watched the sport, also to the hunts and followed the hounds on foot, or upon my bicycle. I have thoroughly enjoyed the day, and should do so again, and hope to do so many times; but I am simply showing where the cruelty comes in. With shooting, this is what occurs: a pheasant gets a dose of shot, but not sufficient to kill him, and he gets away. The shooter remarks: "I can't think how that bird got away. I hit him; I know I hit him." And then he turns round to have another go at the next birds that comes over him. And so it goes on. Probably the shooter forgets in the excitement of shooting the sufferings of the poor wretched bird that has been shot and has got away; or maybe, it is a hare that gets away with a broken hind leg, and has to live upon three until the fourth heals up.

Take the hunt: gentlemen ride up to the meet; a cart or van arrives on the scene with a stag in it, which is released from the van to be hunted about the country by hounds and "humane" gentlemen upon horses, until the poor thing is either too tired out to go any further, or is found to have staked itself upon some railings when jumping, through being too "done up" to clear the rails properly. The poor beast has to be destroyed. There is one thing certain, and that is that the cruelty which does occur with birds in cages (caused by some dealers and catchers), is quite unnecessary, and need not be, and it can be most easily remedied without attempting to stop everyone from catching and keeping birds, and so tarring us all with the same filthy brush. But the cruelty attaching to shooting and hunting can never be altered without doing away with these "sports" altogether, for it is impossible for any shooter to make certain that a bird or animal shall never get away with shot in it to possibly to die a lingering and painful death.

The whole thing amounts to this: these people whom we term "faddists," who think they ought to stop everyone from getting and keeping birds, are for the most part very ignorant about bird-life in the wild state, and what can be done with the birds in aviaries and cages properly constructed. They know nothing of the heavy destruction of bird life that goes on amongst the birds in their wild state—destruction far and away greater than ever occurs amongst birds in captivity. This I not only state, but will absolutely prove; and, remember that proof based upon knowledge is worth many tons of theory. I am making a statement now that perhaps many will wonder at, and that is, that Nature does a great deal more harm in bird life than we bird-keepers do by keeping birds in cages and aviaries. I am also ready to prove that the professional bird-catcher with his nets cannot make Linnets, etc., scarce. I will also prove that boys taking birds' eggs in the early spring months (regrettable though this thoughtless destruction is) do not make birds scarce. I am aware that these people who are against us may say that they have only my word for these statements. I am also aware that there is an old saying, "all men are liars," but here again we do not want to be tarred with the same brush, and, thank heaven, there are still left in this world people who can and do speak the truth.

With regard to the people who are trying to take from us that which is so dear and which we have a perfect right to—our hobby. I feel sure in my own mind that if they were approached and we were to give our experience of birds in captivity and show and teach these people what they cannot teach us, that they would be reasonable. To give us a hearing is their bounden duty. We are not going to be treated as nonentities. P. F. M. GALLOWAY.

Birds that Prefer Captivity to Liberty.

A Chaffinch Gladly Returns "Home."

SIR,—Recently a lot has been said about the keeping of British birds in captivity; some birds, however, prefer the latter to their freedom. The other evening whilst attending to my birds, one of my children pushed open the outer door of the aviary, when I happened to have the inner door open at the same time. Out flew my favourite Chaffinch. I felt his escape very much, for he is a very good specimen, and has done well on the show bench. I hunted every likely place to try and recapture him, but not a sign of him could I discover. I was out next morning as soon as daylight, on the chance of seeing him about. He was there right enough, too, on a tree overhanging the aviary. I hurriedly opened the door, when he immediately flew in, and was quite "perky," and seemed quite pleased to get back.—P. WALSH (Sheffield).

Linnets Voluntary Return to Cage Life.

SIR,—The voluntary return of escaped birds has been frequently recorded. I had an instance come under my notice last week, which, in view of the present agitation, is at least interesting. Strangely enough, it happened with one who has hitherto, though a very successful Canary breeder, been reluctant to try Mule breeding owing to his prejudice against caging the necessary Britishers. However, I prevailed on him to give it a trial, and selected a Linnet out of a lot, the remainder of which, after a few days' detention, were liberated as "dancers." That was in December last, and the docility of that particular bird astonished me. Though field-moulted (as shown by his red breast) he not only paired readily with a large Norwich hen, but fed her regularly, and assisted to rear the young, finishing them off, while the hen was incubating her second nest of eggs. But the climax came last week, when, during bathing operations, this Linnet escaped, and as his owner, Mr. Hamilton, of Eskbank, has an uninterrupted view of about three miles of fields from his bird-room window, it was considered a hopeless quest to hunt for the bird. Jim, however, was inconsolable, and tramped those fields looking for his lost Linnet. A few hours after he came excitedly in, grabbed an empty cage, and rushed out again. Excitement ran riot. Mrs. H., from an elevation, reported progress. "He sees it; it's on the dyke; he's handing up the cage, and crying tae it. Guidness gracious, the bird's in! Weel dune, Jim."

A Homing Black-faced Lovebird.

SIR,—It might probably interest some of your readers to give particulars of the above. In January, 1909, I purchased a pair of Black-faced Lovebirds. During the whole of the time they have kept in the best health until two or three weeks ago, when I noticed the hen bird appeared to be ailing. It did not get any better, and died June 21st. On Sunday morning, June 26, the cock was in my open garden aviary all right, but in the afternoon I noticed it was missing, and I found, after a little search, a small opening where it had evidently escaped. I did not see or hear anything more of it, and naturally thought I never should, but, to my great surprise, on Sunday morning, July 3rd, I saw it on the top of the aviary. I opened the door, and it immediately flew in. I may say it was none the worse after its week's holiday.
W. R. PICKLES, Morecambe.

The Conservative Rook.

The Rook is one of the most conservative birds, and will rarely change his nesting site; and no mortal power, no amount of coaxing, no expenditure of money, no amount of labour —will induce him to build in trees, which one would perhaps like to see him inhabit. Certain trees do not appeal to him.

Bird Destruction in France.

A correspondent of the Paris Figaro has been protesting against the way in which children are allowed to destroy bird life in France. The writer says it is an anomaly that the artistic countries of France and Italy are those where birds are least respected, while practical, commercial, spirited England and German enact measures for their preservation. In English schools prizes are given to the children who show acts of kindness to little birds. In France the children ravage the nests, usually with the full countenance of their seniors, making strings of all the eggs they can find, and taking away the young birds to certain death. He complains bitterly that some of these children are allowed to use small firearms, termed "garden guns," and says that the father of a family told him that his two boys had killed in one year a thousand small birds with such weapons (Robins, Sparrows, Linnets, etc.). The worst of this is that the nesting pair get killed, and their young ones are starved to death in consequence. The writer, M. Louis Fernier, says that this was the case with some young Thrushes in his own garden, his neighbour's children having shot the old birds.

Manager, "CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet St., London,

Will secretaries and fanciers, writes Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, late of Reservoir Hotel, Whitefield Road, Liverpool, please note that I have opened the Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool? Will makers of appliances, etc., also kindly send me their trade lists?

On July 13 at the Charity School, Church Street, Edmonton, a lecture on "Cage Birds" will be given by Mr. G. Gardner ("G.G."); time 8.30, under the auspices of the Edmonton F.A., writes Mr. J. S. Jackson, the secretary. All cage bird fanciers are invited.

Our next Nest Feather show will be held on July 16, in Viaduct Temperance Hotel, with the same classification as last show; judge, Mr. H. Connerton, writes Mr. W. H. Wright, hon. secretary, Carlisle and Dis. C.B.S. Will members please do their best and let us have a good entry?

I was very pleased to see my Clear Yellow depicted on the front page of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, for which I thank you sincerely. I am a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS, and think it the best paper that has ever been produced for the benefit of the Fancy.—J. H. FOWLE (Queenshury, Bradford).

There is a very excellent list of specials for competition amongst the members of the Liverpool Bird Breeders' Association, including one each for first, second, third, fourth, and fifth most points in both champion and novice sections, and specials for the various sections. These are for competition at both Nest Feather and open shows.—F. E. HAWKES, Hon. Sec.

At a meeting held on the occasion of our show, July 1, writes Mr. T. P. Baxter, secretary of the Runcorn C.B.S., it was decided to hold the next meeting on August 12. Will the absent members kindly note the change of date? A paper will be read by Mr. Baxter on "The Moulting and Colour-feeding of Canaries," and it is hoped every member will attend.

With a view to encouraging the breeding of Crests and Crestbreds, the President of our association is giving a silver-plated tea pot for most points gained by a member at shows patronised by us during the 1910 show season, writes Mr. George Sanderson, hon. secretary, Kent County C.B.A. The number of shows under our patronage will not exceed four or five at the utmost.

In the July issue of the "Avicultural Magazine" will be found notes on "The Age of Birds in Confinement," by Mr. J. Lewis Bonhote, M.A., and articles on "The Nesting of the Argentine Blackbird" (by Mr. P. W. Thorniley), "Birds of Paradise" (by Mr. W. Goodfellow), "Indian Birds" (by Mr. Frank Finn, F.Z.S.), etc., besides much other interesting matter. There are also several excellent illustrations.

May I draw the attention of London bird-lovers, writes Mr. C. W. Law, hon. secretary, Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S., to the fact that we have a record entry for our young stock show, to be held this Saturday, July 9 (see advertisement). There are 180 entries, amongst them some really good birds, to be sold at reasonable prices, with the idea of swelling the funds of the society.

Eight classes for cage birds are being provided at the show of the Llandrindod Wells F. and F.A., to be held on August 11, with Mr. C. A. House as judge. It is hoped there will be a large entry and a large attendance. The secretary is Mr. P. Muscott, Tremont Road, Llandrindod Wells, who writes that all the committee are well-known fanciers, and that there will be specials in every class, some of which are very valuable.

Another Nest Up the Spout.

A pair of Tits have, according to a Wigton local paper, built their nest in the famous Wigton pump, which formerly stood in the Market Place. The pump was referred to by Charles Dickens in "The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices," and now occupies a site in the grounds at Highmoor. A numerous family of young Tits have been hatched, and as the only means of ingress and egress to the pump is by the spout, it is interesting to see the parent birds darting in and out of their iron abode.

The Nightingale Acquitted.

The highest Court of Appeal in the Austrian Empire, after months of litigation, says the "North-Eastern Daily Gazette," has decided that the song of a Nightingale is not a nuisance. A citizen of Graz, Herr Henziel, keeps a Nightingale in a cage, and on fine nights hangs it outside the window. A neighbour complained to the police authorities, that the bird's song disturbed his slumbers, and the municipality ordered the owner of the Nightingale to keep it inside the house at night. Herr Heinzel appealed to the Government of Styria and then to the Ministry of the Interior, but both these administrative authorities refused to interfere with the decision of the municipality. Herr Heinzel then appealed to the Court of Administration, which has jurisdiction over the highest executive and administrative functionaries. Five judges, including the President, Baron Schenk, gave a learned judgment in favour of the owner of the Nightingale.

Buyers of colour foods, has it ever struck you when buying colour food in paper packages, that the colour absorbed by the paper package is part of the colour you have paid for and want in your birds? Again, do you know that colour foods should be kept in canisters, and not in paper bags? Colour foods are spoilt and lose their goodness when exposed to damp, and in this changeable climate we get plenty of damp. Therefore, insist on having Ramsden's pure peppers, which are sent out in canisters only, and full weight guaranteed.—(Advt.)

It was a pleasant surprise to find a sketch of my bird recently on the front page of CAGE BIRDS. It is a lifelike drawing, for which accept my best thanks. I entered two birds in the novice classes at the show named, and put on entry form: "If cancelled, transfer to champion classes." The novice classes were cancelled, so I had the pleasure of winning a first and a second in the champions. Since that time I have sent to 7 or 8 shows, and always been in the first three.—T. GROVES (Brierley Hill).

The Wood Green and Dis. F. and F.A. book of rules, etc., for 1910-11 is a neatly got-up affair, and contains, not only the rules of the association, but a list of the members and a programme of events, which latter includes some interesting items, not the least of which is a lecture to be given on July 12, entitled "The Daylight Bill and its Relation to Fanciers," by Mr. Callegari. Particulars as to membership may be had of the hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. Wm. G. Bruce, 10, Wateville Road, Lordship Lane, Tottenham, London, N.

Border Fancy Canary Club.

The list of members will be sent to printers in a week or two. Will those who intend becoming members kindly forward their names at once?—M. JAMIESON, hon. secretary, Green Terrace, Hawick.

The Song of the Siren.

A Canary that is valued because of its singing abilities was put out in its cage back of the store of its owner, Joseph Mechaley (of Stamford, Conn., U.S.A.), on May 11th, according to the "New York World." A cat pulled the cage down and broke it, but the bird escaped to a tree. Mr. Mechaley tried all sorts of devices to get the fugitive back, but without success. Then he took a mechanical Canary bird that hung in a cage in his store and climbed a tree. He wound it up, and when it sang the real Canary flew towards it and answered in song. Mr. Mechaley's presence frightened the Canary, so he took the mechanical bird to the second floor and set the cage on the window sill. He wound it up and concealed himself. After a good deal of singing and flying around the cage, his pet Canary entered and was recaptured.

Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C.

The Cinnamon Marked Yorkshire Canary Club have decided, during the coming season, to run three competitions, viz., champion competition, novice competition, and a junior novice competition. This latter will run concurrently with Yorkshire Union novice classes. Any fancier desiring to join should apply to the secretaries, who will be very pleased to forward all particulars. We have received application for patronage from the undermentioned clubs:—City of Bradford (judge, A. W. Hartley), Laisterdyke (A. Hirst), Bradford West, Huddersfield (H. W. Walsh), Windhill (P. Mason), Shipley (W. Cruise), Brighouse (J. Hartley), Halifax (T. Bennett), Queensbury, Newcastle-on-Tyne (J. Bailey), Manchester and Northern Counties (H. W. Battye), and London C.B.A. Will secretaries of societies see they are not omitted from the above list?—GRAYSHON AND ALLEN (Wormald Street, Flush, Heckmondwike).

A Feathered Rag Collector.

Mr. Harry Croxford (Margate) is the owner of a remarkably tame hen Canary (according to the "Isle of Thanet Gazette"), which, being uncaged and having the free run of the house and garden, has busied itself by nest building in all sorts of places. Two nests have been built behind the clock in the breakfast room, and the bird has recently built a third nest and deposited four eggs in it, making twelve eggs laid this year. One nest which Mr. Croxford has preserved is a curiosity in its way. It is composed of enough odds and ends to fill a cigar box, and among the things gathered for the purpose are pieces of string, cotton, fibre pulled from mats, threads from the carpet, wool from a rug, leaves, and the young shoots of plants, a piece of lace, scraps of paper, and other things, making a heterogeneous collection of everything that could be carried in the bird's beak. An attempt was made to hatch four Linnet's eggs, but this proved a failure.

The Commoner Diseases of Birds: Their Symptoms and Treatment.

By G. YATES, M.R.C.V.S.

Bronchitis.

Bronchitis is a very common ailment in birds, and is more often encountered where birds are kept in insanitary surroundings, which, with overcrowding and bad ventilation, inhalation of dust (irritants), and adverse changes in the weather, all tend to produce this disease. Although in itself not often fatal, yet the disease has a tendency to extend and invade the smaller bronchial tubes, and the lungs themselves, producing broncho-pneumonia, which is in all cases fatal. But with early recognition and suitable treatment this should be avoided.

Singularly enough, there is not much interference with appetite, the bird feeding. But in the intervals between "meals" it assumes a listless attitude. In the larger species there will be observed a slight noise of a wheezy character; this is not always perceptible in the smaller birds, but in most there is gaping. Provided the disease does not extend, then recovery occurs fairly rapidly, and there is no recurrence.

The bird should be placed in a well ventilated room, at the same time ensuring warmth. No alteration in the diet is necessary, but a little green food, if procurable, will materially assist in recovery. Give a course of the following medicine:—

Carbonate of Ammonia, 3 grains;
Tinct. of Squills, 3 drops;
Glycerine, 5 drops;

twice daily in drinking water. This, of course, is for one dose. Enough may be dispensed to last one for a week, when it should be discontinued. As a recuperative, 4 drops of compound infusion of gentian should be given night and morning, similarly administered in the drinking water. To any one of the prescriptions herein given a small quantity of simple syrup may be added where any diffiently is experienced in getting the bird to partake of the mixutre.

Pneumonia.

Pneumonia is perhaps one of the commonest diseases to which birds are liable, due in great part to the delicate structure of their organs of breathing, feeling as they do most keenly any variation in the temperature of the air, moisture and density more particularly. It is a common occurrence during easterly winds and damp cold weather. Newly imported birds are the greatest sufferers, and the mortality resulting amongst them from pneumonia is considerable; they are susceptible for months after importation, the process of acclimatisation taking a very long time.

The greatest difficulty in connection with pneumonia is the rapid manner in which it shows itself. There is scarcely any warning. A bird may be ailing for two or three days, or, as is more common, sudden illness is manifested. The bird is huddled up, "all of a heap," to use a common expression, wings drooping, and breathing very heavily; there is often a clicking noise made by grinding the beak, and the beak is often open owing to the difficulty of inspiring the air, the degree of this depending upon to what extent the lungs are affected. The portion of lung attacked is put completely out of action, so that the breathing becomes necessarily quicker to enable sufficient air to be inspired to properly aerate the blood. There is great distress, which increases as the disease advances, the bird often emitting a little noise, as though in pain, which is really due to asphyxia. In the course of a few hours it falls from its perch and dies. Cases vary in duration, some lasting two or three days, others but a few hours, some even being found dead with little or no warning. Rarely, however, there occurs a pneumonia which may exist for several weeks, gradually assuming a more chronic form, in which the lungs become solid or consolidated (which is a rare feature in the bird), the breathing is only slightly distressed, and there are intervening periods of apparent health.

Treatment in cases of acute pneumonia is problematical; there is such little warning, the symptoms are so alarming, that one is at a loss to know what to do. The owner invariably rushes to the brandy bottle, forces a few drops between the beak, and kills the bird by so doing. This occurs frequently, the actual manipulation and too energetic interference accounting for the death of many birds so affected. At this stage medicinal treatment must not be considered. The best thing is to place the bird in the warmest spot available. If one possesses a hot air cupboard heated by hot water pipes, there is no better treatment than to place it there. If not, the cage should be placed as near the fire as possible, to ensure thorough warmth, which will often revive a bird. If this is successful in ameliorating the symptoms to allow of treatment, then one might have recourse to the following formula:—

Liquor Ammon. Acet., 3 drops;
Tincture of Squills, 3 drops;
Sweet Spirits of Nitre, 2 drops;
Simple Syrup, 5 drops.

This, however, should not be administered forcibly. It is better to wait until the bird has sufficiently recovered to partake of it in its drinking water, in which it should be given fresh twice daily. Rather than to attempt forced administration it is better to do nothing at all. This treatment may be followed by a course of any of the vegetable tonics, infusion of calumba being a useful one given in doses of four drops night and morning in the drinking water.

Congestion of the Lungs.

Congestion of the lungs is again of very common occurrence, but is not necessarily fatal, and it occurs in those birds of a robust nature, and is seen commonly in the spring, during the breeding season, affecting the cock birds chiefly. On the other hand it may occur in either sex from exposure to heat, to direct rays of the sun (where birds are exposed in cages in the window during the warmer months).

This complaint acts by oppressing the heart, the free circulation of blood through the lungs is impeded, and there is consequently a stagnation or over full condition, with impure blood. It is referable in all cases to depressed heart action. In the breeding season it generally seems to occur from over excitement (in young birds mostly), and is often accompanied by hemorrhage from the lungs, or in some cases from the giving way of one of the large blood vessels coming off from the heart, and then this latter organ is found surrounded by a blood clot on examination. The symptoms are usually rapid, many birds falling from their perch dead, the breathing is stertorous, and there is thorough exhaustion; the beak is maintained open owing to the difficulty of breathing.

The treatment in such cases is not medicinal; as soon as it is noticed the bird should be placed in a cool and shady place, and left religiously alone, any attempt at manipulation rapidly ending fatally. If not too far advanced, the birds invariably rally and quickly recover; when hemorrhage has occurred, death, of course, rapidly ensures. It is of the nature of a heat apoplexy, and occurs in all animals.

The Breeding of the Exhibition Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire.

By D. MALLINSON & SON.

A Lecture read before the Halifax O.S. on June 4.

Breeding with Related Birds.

The heavily-marked birds, on an average, run larger than the others. This difficulty I have proved can be remedied somewhat. I mean the variation in markings. That is, by in-breeding; and I find it the only way to bring around a stud of birds so that you will breed very few foul-marked birds. I advise it more with this class of bird than with any other, seeing markings are so much to be counted on. I have found it to be of great advantage, and if not overdone there is more benefit to be derived from it than from any other method I have tried. I seldom run my birds any nearer than cousins, although I have had good results with nearer relations.

I bred one of the best buff-marked cocks I ever had from grandson and grandmother. This is not as near as you can get, but plenty near enough. Brother-and-sister-pairing, in my opinion, is of no use whatever. You gain nothing whatever. And I never in-breed just for the sake of in-breeding. There must be something I am aiming at—something in a certain bird I want to establish permanently amongst my stock. If you have a good bird, say a cock, you can by judicious in-breeding get a large percentage of that bird's blood into your birds. I should pair such a cock with two hens that were unrelated, and if lucky enough to breed some youngsters from both hens, I should pair these youngsters together next season, providing they matched fairly well together. These would be half-brother and half-sister. From this method of pairing you are getting about 75 per cent. of the best cock's blood into your youngsters the second season's breeding. These birds of the second season's breeding I should not pair any nearer related than cousins, as running them constantly too near may have a tendency to reduce the stamina in the birds if overdone.

I give this method of in-breeding from experience, and have proved it to be of great advantage to a breed where markings and type must be combined in one bird. I was for thirty years a perfect unbeliever in breeding with related pairs. At one time I would rather let a bird remain idle for a season than pair it with a bird that was related to it. I found I could get very little nearer what I wanted, although I was breeding with good birds. I never seemed to hit on the right vein until I began to utilise the advantages of in-breeding. I do not mean to say a fancier can begin with a poor class of birds, and with constant in-breeding produce first-class specimens. You must have a decent stock to begin with; and I rather like them on the large side, if anything. There is then something to work with.

Not an Impossible Task.

If you begin with birds on the small side you have an uphill fight, having nothing to work on, as birds are apt to breed back a long way, and very often they breed worse and less birds than themselves. This is taking the average, but I have seen pairs breed birds far better and bigger than the parents, and I firmly believe, if properly worked with decent birds, you can, by in-breeding, improve them considerably in a few seasons' time. I do not mean you should begin with large, coarse-feathered birds, with no type or anything else to recommend them, only their size. I would rather have birds on the small side than this class of bird, as you get nothing but bad shape and coarse feather. The bird on the small size is generally good type and quality, and if a larger one comes out it is generally a decent bird.

The markings of the Cinnamon tick seem to be a great drawback to many bird fanciers. He often gets disgusted with the odd sort of markings he gets. Often enough the best typical birds are badly marked or only ticked, which is almost the same, as they cannot win against a good marked bird, only the ticked bird is worth far more for breeding youngsters than a heavily-variegated bird. In my opinion, in most cases where a breeder gets such a large percentage of variegated birds, he has not got them fairly worked together, or they would not throw out so badly. I have bred a very thin percentage of variegated birds during the last fifteen years.

It is about twelve years since I bred a proper self-cinnamon. It was a yellow cinnamon cock, a real good bird had it only been nicely marked, when it would have been an eye-opener; the usual cry. I showed him a few times in the A.O.V. class, but he could get no further than the "codding cards," the Crests and Belgians beating a bird of this sort. I have bred lots approaching selfs since, but very few in one season. Once you get the markings fairly well-established and keep on the light side and do not pair two marked birds together, you will not be troubled with a roomfull of darks.

An Aid to Firmness in Markings.

I always like one or two on the heavy side, to keep well in touch with the markings. I have had birds moult out their markings well-established—not slightly ticked birds. I put it down to getting them on the light side. The Cinnamon has been of a pale colour, more of a dun than anything. I always like a dark-eyed hen or two to run amongst my Cinnamon marks. It helps to keep the markings more firm, and enables one to obtain better type. Care must be taken to see that the birds are not bred from variegated greens, or it will ruin the best-regulated stock of Cinnamon-marks.

Some breeders prefer marked cocks to clear hens for obtaining the best markings. I do not think there is anything in this theory, as I have bred good marked birds both ways. You can get as many well-marked birds from a marked hen and clear cocks as you can from a marked cock and clear hen.

The worst way of pairing is double-marked breeding, as you are increasing the marked blood too much, and in nine cases out of ten get a lot of foul-marked birds, if not direct from the pair, as throws-back from youngsters. I would rather run a pair of clears any time than a pair of marks. I have seen it tried with a pair of even-marked birds. The owner thought like would produce like, but he was rather surprised and disappointed when, out of the first nest, there came a self-cinnamon, the other three clear birds; not one resembling either of the parents in markings.

Markings to be Avoided.

The markings to be most avoided in cinnaman-marked breeding are "saddle markings," "chest splashings," and "cinnamon tails." For a new beginner, it is advisable to go to a reliable breeder and get a set of good stock birds. What I mean by "a set" is two hens and one cock. I usually run mine that way. He may possibly "hit on" first season. I have known this the case many a time. If not, he must try and work them together to the best of his ability.

I have given a few examples where good has been obtained, and bad can be derived. I must say it is not one of the easiest things on earth to produce an up-to-date Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire. I have had a good experience, and question whether there is anyone who has had as much with this variety. I have been a breeder of the Cinnamon tick for over fifty years, and have seen many ups and downs in that time; lots of things I have forgotten. I may mention that the old method of pairing is not altogether out of practice. It is only about a month ago that a man told me he had two grand hens and a cock. He was thinking of breeding some fine, even-marked birds. I asked him if it was a marked cock. He said no, it was a clear, and the hens were Cinnamons. I told him I was afraid he would get a lot more foul marks than even marks. Besides, I added, it is a question whether the cock is a pink-eyed bird, and if not there will be some pretty even marks come out; I fear they will resemble Linnets. So, you see, the old method has not been entirely forgotten. This man was in no bird society, or he would have had different ideas.

The Worst Cross of All.

I should never advise this way of breeding for markings. I have tried both ways, and have found the other method the better of the two. I must also say: Never run a dark-eyed bird with a variegated Cinnamon, as it is the very worst cross of all—you produce such a lot of foul-marked birds, usually splash-marked birds, almost pied in lots of cases. The main reason why such foul-marked birds and self-Cinnamons should be avoided as much as possible is that you cannot sell the youngsters so well. The dealers will scarcely have them. So it is wise to study what is saleable, and try and avoid breeding these unsaleable birds. The best of breeders will breed birds only fit for the dealers. No matter what his stock is like, or how much he has paid for it, there will be some of these sort amongst a season's breeding. I have made the above remarks as I have found things by experience, and I hope they will be beneficial to fanciers of this classical Yorkshire, and may help the breeder to produce the ideal we are all striving to obtain.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

THE OLDEST BRITISH BIRD FANCIER IN BEDFORD.

An Interesting Chat About Birds.

Tho other day I called on Mr. Wm. Page, who lives in one of the pleasant almshouses in Dame Alice Street, Bedford. Whenever I meet friend Page he invariably asks: "How's your father?" and always adds, "You know he was my schoolmaster." I have an idea that he has particular and striking reasons for remembering that my father was his schoolmaster! And, if he has not, I certainly have, for he was my schoolmaster, too! However, let me inform readers that Mr. Page is the oldest fancier in Bedford, and is now hale and hearty, although 83 years of age.

"Now, Mr. Page," I said; "I want you to tell me something of your experiences. How many years is it since you commenced bird-catching?" He quickly replied: "Over 70 years," and then added: "If I could get at it now, I should like it as much as ever."

"There were no tantalising bird laws in those days, I suppose?" was my next query.—"No! I could catch as many as I liked, and no one interfered with me. It was no uncommon thing for me to bring home three or four dozen Goldfinches, and the farmers would sometimes send word, asking me to go and catch the Linnets which were eating and destroying their turnip seed; and gentlemen would ask me to go to their gardens and catch the Bullfinches which were eating the buds on the gooseberry and other fruit trees."

"Now, Mr. Page, some people say that it is cruel to keep birds in cages; what say you?"—"Not if they are properly fed and cared for," was the reply: "and I have had many which became very tame, and were great pets—in fact, I have had them come back to their cages even after they had been given their liberty. For instance, many years ago I was mule breeding, when one of my Goldfinches escaped, and I quite expected I had lost it, as it was only a recently caught bird, but after it had been away two days and three nights, I was in my garden talking to a friend, when I heard the well-known "Pretty dick," and looking up I espied the truant on the clothes prop. I ran into the house and quickly brought out a cage, which I set in the garden, and almost instantly the bird popped into it, glad to get home again after his wanderings. I was very pleased to get him, as I felt sure he would make a good Muler."

"Do you think birds live as long in captivity as when they have their liberty?"—"Certainly," was the reply: "it not longer. I knew a man, for instance, who had a Goldfinch that lived 19 years, and a very nice bird it was, too, quite as good as the one you showed at the last Bedford show." (I thought that was a feather in my cap, for if anyone knows a Goldfinch, friend Page does.)

"What about mortality among fresh-caught Goldfinches?" I asked. "Isn't it always very heavy?"—"I do not believe in catching Greypates until they begin to show their colour—that is, at the end of September. Even then they must have a lot of their natural food, such as thistle and teazle seed, and gradually be got on to hard seed; if this is done the loss will not be great."

Mr. Page chatted on, indulging in reminiscences of the thousands of birds which had passed through his hands, and he said that he considered it a shame that a working-man could not keep his Linnet or Goldfinch without being in danger of being pounced upon by an officer of the law. "I was out catching one day," he continued, "when I heard one of the best songsters I had ever listened to, singing on an oak tree. I had at that time a cock bird down in my nets, but the stranger took no notice whatever of him, so I fetched out an old hen, braced her, and put her on the stick. She called to him, and he was down in no time, and, of course, he was mine. I sold him to a gentleman for a very small sum, and he afterwards told me that the bird had won several singing matches, and that he had sold it for £3."

Mr. Page has bred a good many birds in his time, and this season has reared a few nice Canaries. But his favourite bird is a good Goldfinch-Canary Mule, and whenever there is a show in the town he is always on the spot, and generally has one or two for exhibition. May he live yet a number of years to enjoy his delightful hobby.—J. C. Wilmot.

Cheltenham C.B.S.

Eighteen members and friends journeyed by brake on June 25, to Wainlodes Hill, on the banks of the Severn, noted for its beauty and salmon teas at the Red Lion. Although the weather was showery and rain fell heavily several times, a very enjoyable time was spent. Upon arrival we were joined by Mr. Payne and Mr. Houghton, of Gloucester. After facing the camera, the party broke up into groups, and enjoyed a quiet stroll along the banks of the river. Returning to the inn, we found tea ready, and all fell to with a will upon a salmon which at five o'clock that morning had been sporting in the river, not 100 yards from where we sat. After tea, a move was made for the open air, and some of the party chartered boats and rowed to Haw Bridge. Unfortunately rain fell, and rather spoiled what would have been a most enjoyable part of the programme. Naturally a keen look-out was kept for the feather tribe, and the following birds were seen: Red-backed Shrike, Kestrel Hawk, Yellow Bunting, Heron, Yellow and Grey Wagtails, Hedge Sparrows, Robins, Peewits, Moor Hens, Reed Bunting, Goldfinches, Linnets, Chaffinches, Greenfinches, Sandpipers, Thrushes, and Blackbirds. ON THE TOP RUNG:

And How I Got There.

(That well-known Scottish artist and fancier, Mr. Thos. Aitken, has undertaken a commission for Cage Birds to visit several of the prominent fanciers North of the Border, and put on record for the benefit of our readers brief details of the methods by which they have attained success in the hobby. Precious subjects have been Mr. A. M'Farlane (Norwich Plainheads), Mr. G. G. Henderson (British), Mr. W. M'Clure (Scots Fancy), and Mr. A. Chalmers (Norwich, etc.).—Editor).

Mr. R. B. Jarvie (Shawlands, Glasgow).

What an appetising odour is wafted to my nostrils as I pass through Mr. Jarvie's bakery to get to his bird house. Oat cakes! Oat cakes!! Nothing but oat cakes meet the eye. I then enter a little yard; here is erected Mr. Jarvie's bird room. Were it not for the birds and cages, which are visible from outside, it might easily be taken for a neat little hot-house. It is raised about a foot from off the ground; measurements, ten and a-half feet long and seven feet broad, while in height it varies from seven feet at front to about ten at back.

Entrance is gained by a door in front, the upper part of which is panelled with glass, as also is the top half of the front of the house, and part of the roof. The latter has roller blinds fitted on the inside, which can be drawn down or rolled up at will. The whole room is painted white inside, and the floor is boarded. The cages are shelved off, one above the other, and between each two cages is slipped a thin piece of wood to act as a partition. The shelf and the cages are about six inches or so away from the back wall.

Mr. Jarvie uses the all-wire cages, and none measure less than 22 x 14 x 14. Most of these are fitted with sand drawers, while the others, although not fitted with the same convenience, have their tops removable, and this enables their bottoms to be cleaned.

In his bird room Mr. Jarvie has seventeen pairs of Norwich, with forty-seven young birds, at the time of my visit, all doing well. Of these, thirty-seven are on the perches, and the remainder in the nests. Several of the hens are sitting for the second round.

"How do you pair up?" I inquired.—"I simply put up yellows with buffs. I never double buff."

"I never take away canary seed from my birds at any time; they get it the whole year round. My food pans have always a plentiful supply of egg food in them. These pans, by the way, I place beside, and on a level with, the perches; in this position my birds rarely jump on them, and there is greater cleanliness than if they were placed at the bottom of the cages."

"What is your egg food composed of?"—"Tea biscuits and egg; two biscuits to the egg. I find my birds are much firmer (harder) on tea biscuits than they are on sponge biscuits. I always advocate the use of tea biscuits rather than the sponge. The sponge biscuits, in order to render them soft, are either adulterated with ammonia, or contain a certain amount of fat; they would not keep soft were not one or other of these two things in them. I stop giving egg food directly the young have stopped moulting."

"I always like to give the young, when six weeks old, an occasional run into the show cages, as I find that after the moult they then take to them more easily. During the period the birds are in the moult I darken the room by drawing down the blinds, which, as you can see, are red in colour.

"I start at the end of July to colour-feed. I never heat up my colour with the egg food, but just give it loose, as I don't think it natural for a Canary to pick at paste."

"Do you use hot pepper when colour feeding?"—"Never! The taste of it is sufficient for me, without my wishing to give it to bird or beast. I use the tasteless pepper. I don't use any artificial heat. The average temperature in the room is between 45 and 50 degrees."

"Are these slices of bread I see stuck in between the cage wires soaked in milk?"—"Oh, no! I'll tell you exactly what it is, and in the early spring it is better for the birds than all the green foods put together. Some of my friends to whom I have advocated it have entirely stopped the use of green food, and give this instead. It is white bread simply saturated in water, after which I place it between the palms of my hands and firmly squeeze all the water out. And there you see it between the cage wires."

"By the way, do you see anything else besides sand strewn on the cage bottoms?"

"I do; oatmeal, to be sure!"

"Yes, and plenty of it. The birds nibble at it, and it keeps them fine and healthy."

Wild Bird Life.

Scarcity of Flycatchers.

One of the mysteries of ornithology is the distribution of certain species. We are able at times to give what are apparently good reasons why certain birds have failed to frequent a district for a given time. The weather conditions and the food supply are undoubtedly the chief factors in governing the doings of the feathered race. But occasionally we get an influx of certain birds in a district which we can in no way account for, and at other times we miss some familiar species from their accustomed haunts, although the conditions are apparently in no way altered. A case in point is that in all my rambles this summer I have not seen a single specimen of the Spotted Flycatcher, whereas during some other seasons nearly every rail and gate-post has had its watchful sentinel, ready to dart into the air at each passing insect.

These birds are somewhat erratic in their migrations, and seldom do we get them in about the same numbers two seasons in succession. Three years ago the district was simply packed with them, and it seemed almost wonderful that they could all find sufficient food. To us the weather has been almost ideal, and their particular food should be as plentiful now as it was last summer; but the same unknown reasons for the non-appearance of these charmingly interesting birds may also be the cause of the scarcity of Whitethroats compared with other years, for this latter species is certainly not nearly so plentiful.

We no longer marvel at the return of the Swallows and Martins to the same spot to repair the identical nest used by them in the past, or to build other under the same eaves; but a few other birds are quite as constant in their return to former haunts. The Nightingale will return to the same copse or spinney, and the Butcher-bird to the scene of last season's doings. I have known a pair of these bold, interesting birds to build in the identical bush that still contained the old nest of the previous summer although the home is, as a rule, not difficult to locate. The old birds are careful in visiting it, especially when it contains the young ones; but they are so boldly conspicuous and have a habit of selecting some prominent position as a perch, that a little careful watching under the shade of a neighbouring tree will soon reveal the secret.

A Medicine Measure.

Readers of Cage Birds will, I think, find this idea an excellent one for measuring doses of medicine. It is always an awkward matter to measure exactly a certain number of drops. The sketch will, of course, explain itself. When the liquid falls over the cork it drops more slowly than if dropped direct from the bottle.—A. Slarks.

No. 425.

A Simple Egg Food, etc., Holder.

Sent by Mr. A. E. Porter, 33, Merrick Street, Hull.

To make the following, first obtain a stout bamboo. Saw off outside each of two of the joints so as to have one complete section of the bamboo (see I—I). Then saw straight down the centre of same, when you will have two troughs. Put two pricker-holes through the sides and bend a piece of wire through for holding same to cage. You will thus have two holders or egg-food or grit, or what-not.—A. E. Porter.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

* A Little Heroine.

A pair of Swallows once built their nest under the eaves of a hotel, when soon after a fire broke out. While the building blazed, standing below we noticed a bird flying hurriedly to the spot. She darted through the smoke to save her helpless babes, but was driven back by the heat and smoke. Three times did she risk her own life for her nestlings. The fourth time the flames caught her, and she fell to the ground near our feet.—Sent by K. Jempson (age 9), Soggs Cottage, Hawkhurst, Sussex.

 Just Like Other People.

Mr. and Mrs Spikky Sparrow
Both to London went,
Alighting on the Monument,
Whence they flew down swiftly—pop!
Into Moses' wholesale shop.
There they bought a hat and bonnet,
And a gown with spots upon it,
A satin sash of bloxam blue,
And a pair of slippers, too.

Then, when so completely dressed,
Back they flew and reached their nest.
Their children cried, "Oh, ma and pa!
How truly beautiful you are!"
Said they, "We trust that cold or pain
We shall never feel again.
While perched on tree, or house, or steeple,
We now shall look like other people."

* Sparrows to the Rescue.

One day a friend of my father gave me three Canary's eggs, which, he said, were no good, as the hen had died. So I took them home, and was going to blow them, but having placed a flower pot just above my bedroom window where a Sparrow had built its nest, I went when it was nearly dark and took four eggs out of this Sparrow's nest and put the three Canary's and one Sparrow's eggs back; and every morning I used to watch to see if this Sparrow went into the flower pot. So seeing it go in I never touched it for about a fortnight or a little more, when one day I saw the old bird taking food. I ran upstairs and opened my bedroom window and lifted the flower pot down. There were three young birds and one egg in the nest. I told my father and he took them and placed them with a Canary which had only laid two eggs and hatched one young, and she has reared two out of the three placed under her.—Sent by Francis Lees (age 12), 107, Monk Street, Derby.

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1910 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Dublin members of the Y.C.B.S. on the whole are having a good breeding season; Yorkshires hold the sway in Dublin. Mr. D. Carroll, hon. secretary, has 22 young doing well, and another round to go. It is hoped that he has something extra good, and that he will have something for the novice cup competition. Mr. McDonnell expects a few winners out of his 40 young, which are doing well. Mr. Hally, another novice member of the Y.C.B.S., is doing well with his Yorkies. Mr. Farrell has met with disappointment by his birds going into moult; but it is to be hoped that he will be successful with the next round, and breed something to recompense him. Mr. Stewart, I hear, has met with misfortune by a cat taking a fancy to a dainty meal. Mr. Callaghan is doing well, and Mr. Carolan is going very strong with Mules, Yorkies, and Scotch Fancies. Mr. Cloke, I am pleased to learn, is having a most successful season. I understand his present stock (Yorkies, Norwich, Mules, and foreigners) number close on 200 all told. The recent thunderstorms have done much harm throughout Ireland; many complaints have reached me re young dead in shell, hens failing to feed, etc., due to the severe weather we have had during past few weeks.—"CLOSED RING."

GREAT £20 CASH PRIZES COMPETITION FOR READERS OF "CAGE BIRDS."

In order to stimulate interest in "Cage Birds" between now and the first week in August we have decided to institute a competition on the undermentioned lines and offer £20 in cash prizes upon the following scale:—

First Prize	TEN POUNDS.
Third Prize	TWO POUNDS.
Fourth Prize	ONE POUND.
Fifth Prize	ONE POUND.
Sixth Prize	ONE POUND.
Seventh Prize	ONE POUND.
Eighth Prize	ONE POUND.

Also Twenty Consolation Prizes of a Bound Volume or a Framed Plate, at the Winner's option,

And a Framed Coloured Plate to the reader who sends in the greatest number of Coupons which have no names and addresses thereon (except, of course, the sender's).

In every copy of "Cage Birds" published from now till July 23rd next, we shall print a triangular coupon. This coupon (see below) is provided with a panel upon each side, each panel must be filled in with the name and address in full of a new reader of the paper. One panel, one name and address, three names and addresses complete each coupon. The prizes will be awarded to the readers who send in to us by July 27th at latest the largest number of coupons properly filled in.

For each coupon so sent in with three halfpence in stamps we will send free copies of "Cage Birds" to each of those whose names and addresses appear thereon. Each of these free copies will contain a coupon which in its turn will be available for competition purposes if sent to us properly filled in with three further names and addresses.

RULES.

It must be borne in mind by competitors that:
(1) Each coupon must be legibly and correctly filled up (pencil will do) with the full names and addresses of three new readers of "Cage Birds." (Either actual or possible new readers.)
(2) The prizes will go to the competitors who send in the largest number of properly filled in coupons.
(3) The competition will close finally on Wednesday, July 27th, and no coupons received after first post on that date will be allowed to count in the competition.
(4) The Editor's decision on any point in dispute will be final.

NOTES TO INTENDING COMPETITORS.

Competitors will not be slow to see that the possibilities of obtaining assistance from their friends in such a competition as this are many.

The payment of three halfpence with each coupon is not compulsory but optional. For the halfpenny expended by the possible new reader—that new reader obtains from us a free copy of "Cage Birds." The coupon in this free copy can then be utilised in its turn, either by the original competitor, or by the new reader.

It should be quite possible to persuade your bird-loving friends to entrust you with a halfpenny for a free copy of "Cage Birds." It should also be easy to obtain coupons from present readers—who do not contemplate entering this competition.

Thus it is possible for a competitor to obtain without any expense at all on his part a large number of coupons, which also in their turn may be the means of obtaining further supplies of coupons.

As a further reward to readers we will give a free advertisement in "Cage Birds" to the value of 1s. for every fifty (50) coupons sent in which are eligible for the competition, the said advertisement being available for any issue within three months of the date of the competition closing, viz., July 27th next.

No member of our staff will be allowed to compete.

Ask for coupons at your Club Meetings and at all gatherings of fanciers you may happen to attend.

Arrange with your friends to cut the coupons out of their copies and send them to you at intervals.

If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood and collect all the suitable names and addresses. Don't be afraid of asking your friends to assist you and send you the coupons to help you win the prize.

In any event the cult of Cage Bird Keeping should receive considerable impetus by any labour which in your spare time you may feel disposed to give this competition.

This week's Coupon will be found on page 613

The First Coupon appeared in our Issue of May 28th last.

Under the White Rose.

THE Y.C.C., O.N.P.C., and N.G.M.Y.C.C. each held committee meetings on Saturday last, and two of them were called for 5 o'clock, and one for 6 o'clock. This put those individuals who are unfortunate enough to be on all three in rather a quandary; but "all's well that ends well," the entire business being got through by about 8.30.

O.N.P.C. had a fairly stiff agenda to go through, the most important item being perhaps the allotting of patronage and specials; for the patronage they had 19 applications (which speaks well for the respect the club command with societies), and 10 shows are required for the competitions, therefore they had, perforce, to disappoint 9 of the applicants, for which they are very sorry. The committee trust to be able to give to those another year whom they have had to refuse this time.

N.G.M.Y.C.C. had already fixed up part of their patronage, and on Saturday they got through the remainder. They have now a nice list of shows for their competitions, which should, and no doubt will, do much to popularise the Green Marked Yorkshire. Then the list of specials was arranged, and the general routine of business put ship-shape, all being now favourable to a very successful season, the list of new members being a treat.

THE "Old Original" Y.C.C., the grandfather of all others, had a stiff task to get through their agenda. Two sets of shows are required for their competitions, each to the number of 10, and 26 societies had applied for patronage, but as a judge is only allowed to judge one show in each of the competitions, it was a hard task to avoid "clashing," a great struggle ensuing before all was properly fixed up. The number of new members proposed at the meeting reached well into the teens, and it looks already as though the novices, who are now being catered for in first-class style, are responding to the call.

C.M.Y.C.C. are, I think, to hold their meeting to-day, Saturday, to allot patronage, arrange prizes, and other general business. Then, as far as Canaries are concerned, there will be little room for complaint during next winter. Never in the history of Canarydom has there been such a huge and valuable array of specials to compete for during one season, champions, amateurs, novices, and junior novices all being amply provided for. All we require now is a successful show season to repay the hard-working secretaries and other officials for their labours. Fanciers should not let their work be in vain.

Won't Tell Much.

R. C. Novice.—It is rather unkind of the birdman to be so. This is not the true fancier like spirit. If the birds go on dying I would strongly advise you to get a post mortem on the next, and meantime adopt the strictest method of hygiene and cleanliness, keeping the birds as isolated as possible until you learn result. The book which has been sent you will be a good guide as to the general feeding and treatment of your stock, both old and young, and I cannot do better than advise you to compare your methods all through with this book, and see if you cannot discover where your management is at fault—if it is a question of management. You omit several important details which prevent me from giving more definite instructions now. But if you fail to understand the cause of your losses after carefully perusing the book, write again and give me particulars of your feeding and treatment generally, where the birds are kept, whether they are old or young ones that are dying, and how long it is since you bought the birds, and these deaths began to occur. If you have in the meanwhile obtained a post mortem report enclose it with your next query.

Canary Unwell.

Miss F. Field.—The bird is quite likely to be dropping into moult, but this would not account for the symptoms you name, although it would tend to aggravate them. The bird is suffering from a chill, and whatever the sources may be it is undoubtedly exposed to cold draughts or extremes of heat and cold. See that all such causes are quite removed. Put the bird at once in a cosy place, not necessarily overheated, but still quite comfortable, where the air is pure and fresh, and the temperature as equable as possible. As a staple diet give plain Canary seed only. Every second day give a [illegible] half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternate days a quarter teaspoonful of maw seed. Give also each day until better a piece of bread and milk, the size of a hazel nut, sprinkled with soft sugar. A spray of green food may be given daily. In the drinking water give a small pinch of Epsom salts, and ten drops of lemon juice for one day only. After that four drops of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week, and on the alternate days twenty drops of whisky, six of each of oxymel of squills, and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together. Continue the latter if necessary for a fortnight.

About an Aviary.

Glen Helen.—(1) I am afraid this is asking me to intrude on my colleague's domains, but I will say that in a fairly roomy aviary, mostly all our British Finches would agree under such conditions, and also Buntings. Softbills and insect-eaters are best kept out. Everything depends upon the size of the aviary, and whether you wish the birds to breed or not. Address a query, giving these particulars to our Messrs. Weston and Page, and they will give you the most workable lists. (2) By all means allow the currant bushes to remain. They will be very beneficial rather than otherwise, but if you add one or two Bullfinches to your collection, they will probably make short work of them in spring. (3) In the end of the covered portion will be a much better position for the glazed frames than the roof. You might with advantage examine the illustration of aviary in Part 3 of "Our Canaries" before commencing your structure. (4) If the roofed-in shed is in a sunny position, and sheltered from winds and rain, it will afford sufficient protection for all hardy, naturally-bred Canaries, British birds, and many common Foreign species. A better plan is to hang loosely-tied bundles of soft hay, and German travelling cages, with the short bars removed, and lightly filled with hay, well up near the ceiling. The birds will readily seize upon these, and burrow into the hay to roost, and thus have very warm, snug quarters at night. (5) The chief object is to keep out rats and mice; therefore if you turf the flight there is no necessity to concrete the covered portion. Beat the soil down solid, and cover with an inch layer of gritty sand. (6) Bathe the foot for a few minutes daily with a fairly warm solution of boracic acid—teaspoonful of acid in rather less than a teacupful of warm water. Dry gently, and anoint with zinc ointment. Give a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for a day or two. Do not mate her until the foot is quite well and sound. (7) For twenty birds, to have a chance of breeding, the aviary should have a floor space of at least sixty square feet—as much more as you care to allow, but no less.

A Foursome.

A. J. S.—(1) It is a matter for one's own discretion whether young colour-fed Norwich are tailed and flighted or not. As classes are frequently given at shows for unflighted birds, it cannot be said to be essential, and the practice of flighting should be discouraged. (2) Certainly, you can get good results without any hot pepper, by using a good brand of tasteless red pepper and giving it rather stronger, almost, if not quite, as rich a shade may be obtained, but it is perhaps not quite so permanent. Personally, I do not favour a large proportion of hot pepper,, nor consider such essential. Best Natal red is the kind of hot pepper used now—not ordinary culinary cayenne. (3) A few broken groats are very good now and again, both for old and young birds, but as they are very heating and fattening, they must be used with moderation. They are most useful to help to build the frame of large breeds, such as Lancashires and Crests, and as a tit-bit during the winter months. (4) If you have a good feeding hen there is no reason why you should not succeed in rearing young Canaries and Mules in the same nest, provided the mule-eggs, or young Mules, or vice-versa, had been transferred to the same nest. If you mean is it possible to get both young Canaries and Mules from the same clutch of eggs laid by one hen, I should say though not quite impossible it is in the highest degree improbable.

Motley Moulting.

A. S. N.—If you follow up the treatment below, the birds should go through a complete moult from September to October. Keep them well protected from draughts and chills. Feed on a staple diet of plain canary seed only; every second day give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape per bird; on the alternate days give a teaspoonful of maw to every three or four birds. Twice a week give a half teaspoonful of egg food with a pinch of sweet red pepper mixed in it; and give a spray of chickweed, plantain stalks, or shepherd's purse daily. Let the birds bathe freely in fair weather as much as they desire. Continue this treatment until towards the end of August, and if they have not then begun to drop into moult naturally, put them in a fairly warm room where the temperature is equable; give the same seed diet, but withhold the egg food, and give in its place a small piece of bread and milk, sprinkled lightly with flowers of sulphur and sweet pepper every second day, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and a few shreds of saffron—sufficient of the latter to colour the water when steeped a decided yellow hue. Put a light cover over the cages, and this should soon bring about the desired effect. Watch the birds closely, and as soon as you see them beginning to drop feathers put them on colour food daily at once; half strength at first, and increase it to full strength in about a week. Once they begin, strictly avoid chills and draughts; keep them well on the warm side, and get them through as quick as possible.

Brevities.

Name of Weed (Little Eva).—The weed of which you sent a specimen is the mouse-ear chickweed. It is an excellent mild seed to give to Canaries, and they are very fond of it. You may give the seed stalks in all stages from the half ripe to the fully ripened condition.

Egg with Two Yolks (J. Braidford).—This phenomenon is a trifle uncommon, but by no means rare. Several similar cases are heard of, and many may occur that are not heard of, every season. Cases are also known where two chicks have been hatched out of such eggs, but, as a rule, when these eggs are set one must rather look forward to them producing useless cripples or monstrosities.

Weak Youngster (K. N. S. T.).—Give the bird a staple of plain canary seed. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and a few grains of white millet which has been soaked a few hours and wiped dry. On the alternate days give a small piece of bread scalded in milk, pressed nearly dry, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and lightly dusted with soft sugar, and also give on these days a few grains of split groats. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand, and a piece of cuttlefish stuck in the wires for it to peck at. In the drinking water give twenty drops of chemical food about every second day for two or three weeks.

Seed Sample (C.F.S.).—The mixture is most unsuitable for a staple diet. Indeed, I would go farther, and say it is not suitable even for occasional use, although, had the quality of the seeds been good, the mixture would have done very nicely to give a little occasionally. The quality is very poor throughout; some of the hemp is quite rancid in the kernal; there is practically no summer rape in it, what little rape there is being of the hot mustardy kind, and there is far too much millet for a staple mixture. Your bird would do much better on a staple mixture of three parts good, sound canary and one part summer rape, with a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet, teazle, and maw twice a week.

Suitable Cage (A. C. F.).—A cage of the box type—that is, with wood top, bottom, back, and sides, and wire only in front—about 12in. long, 7½in. deep (back to front), and 14in. high, seed and water vessels hanging on the outside, one each side the front, two perches in lower portion, and one above, will be the best type for its well-being. Hang it on the wall somewhere within the room where the temperature is fairly equable at all times, and quite free from cold draughts, or the fumes of burning lights. Let it be a bright and well-lit position, but strictly avoid any position close to, or within the recess of a window. Feed as frequently advised here; keep a sharp eye on cage for the appearance of red mites, which must be kept at bay. Allow the bird to bathe regularly, and it should cheer you with its song for quite a number of years.

Crest Bred Dying (Novice Crest).—Thanks for letter. Sorry to hear you have lost the hen. Shall await post-mortem with interest.

Not on Song (Parkite).—I advise you to get an experienced fancier to look at the bird, and see if there is any doubt about its being a cock. Personally, I strongly think it is a hen. You may, however, adopt the treatment for two or three weeks given to another querist under heading "Not Singing," and if the bird is really a cock, this should bring it in song, though it is doubtful whether it will get into full song now until after the moult, which is rather too near to give the bird time to develop much of whatever latent powers of song it may possess.

Green and Cinnamon (H. Williams).—Sorry your letter could not be replied to in last issue. The two self Cinnamon young you have bred off the Greens may be fed in the ordinary way, but the other three, which from your description, I take it, are variegated Cinnamons, do not seem of a type fit for showing, and it would be waste of time to feed them. Whether they will be of use for breeding depends upon how the parents are bred. I will keep your letter by me, and if you will describe the parents, and also the grand-parents, if possible, of these young in another letter, I will do my best to advise you what should be done with them.

Wheezy and Puffy (R. or K. N. S. T.).—I suspect the trouble is nothing worse than a little overfeeding, together with the natural constipated condition which arises from the period of inactivity whilst sitting. If the eggs are not yet hatched, give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for one-half of each day for three or four days, or until the young are hatched. Give this mixture last thing at night, and throw away what is left, and replace with fresh water next midday. Now matters have gone so far, there is no reason why the hen should not rear the young if she will, or that they should not be passed on to a foster-parent to rear.

A Difficult Forecast (Bert).—As you know nothing of the pedigree of the cock, it is quite impossible to give you any reliable forecast as to what the progeny will be like in colour. If the cock is a pink-eyed bird, which indicates Cinnamon blood, the young will be mostly Cinnamon-marked or clear pink-eyed, but if he is a dark-eyed bird, and has no trace of Cinnamon blood in his veins, the young will be Greens, selfs and variegated, and you will get no Cinnamon markings from them. One of the cocks from this pair, in the same event, if mated with his mother, will in all probability repeat the above course, but if any Cinnamon-marked bird did turn up it would invariably be a hen. The real point is to know whether there is any trace of Cinnamon blood in the cock, and as this blood is now so widely diffused in the variety, it is a practical impossibility to say whether a given bird possesses it or not, unless one knows its pedigree with certainty.

Mopy and Irritable (A. H. M.).—The bird's position is probably the leading cause. Unless you are absolutely convinced that it is not exposed to draughts (which is almost impossible if window is made to open), or to sudden extremes of heat and cold, you should remove it at once further into room. The irritation is probably due to red mites; examine cage and suspension chain for this pest, probing any likely harbour. Feed on a mixture of three parts canary and one part summer rape as staple. Twice a week give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, teazle, millet, and maw. Every second day for the next fortnight give a piece of stale bread soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar. Give green food daily. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the next week by same means a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, a crystal of sulphate of iron half as big, and six drops of dilute sulphuric acid every second day. Allow bird to bathe daily if it so desires.

Inflammation of Bowels (Christow).—I do not know how you arrive at the conclusion that this is what troubles your birds, but in any case it would have been better to explain the symptoms as well as you could. Green food is usually blamed, but as you have not given any, you see the value of that assertion. I have not a doubt that the cause of the trouble lies in your feeding or the food itself. Look well into all your seeds and foods, and see that they are perfectly sound and good, and see also that your eggs come from a healthy and untainted source. Give a staple diet of plain canary; every second day give a pinch of summer rape per bird; on the alternate days a pinch of maw, and twice a week a half-teaspoonful of a mixture of hemp, teazle, millet, and broken groats. Until they are better, give a small piece of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar daily. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a split pea for one day, and afterwards give a crystal of soda as before, a crystal of sulphate of iron the same size, and four drops of dilute sulphuric acid for three or four days. Keep cages and all food and water vessels scrupulously clean.

Outdoor Aviary (F. J. C.).—Your aviary is really only an extra large flight cage, and when divided into seven compartments, each division will be nothing more than a good-sized breeding cage. If you start properly, by getting the right class of birds to begin with, there is no reason why you should not succeed. Get Part 3 of "Our Canaries," and you will see what has already been done in this way. How to begin is also fully dealt with. Be careful you get only stock birds which are thoroughly healthy and fully acclimatised to living under normal conditions of temperature. Such birds you might turn out at once. Shun all that are in the least degree coddled indoors.

Insect Pests (E. Allfrey).—If the grey coloured insects are those which remain on the body of the bird, and are as large as the red-coloured ones, you have both red mites and grey lice. For the former you must thoroughly overhaul the cage, scrape out every little crack and hole you can discover, and give the whole a good scrub down inside and out with a strong solution of lzal, using a small paint brush to work the fluid into every cranny. Repeat two or three times at intervals for a day or two, then re-paint or distemper, and varnish cage afresh. Pay the same attention simultaneously to the place where the cage has been hanging. Of course, you will keep the bird temporarily in a spare cage whilst doing this. To rid it of the lice, first catch it and dust it very profusely all over with fresh pyrethrum powder, shaking it well into the base of plumage, then roll bird up bodily in a handkerchief, leaving only the beak free for breathing, and lay it down inside the cage for fifteen minutes. Then release it, and give it a bath daily in which a few drops of essence of quassia have been mixed. You may repeat the dusting once after an interval of a week. At the end of week the quassia may be omitted from daily bath, and used twice a week, but the bath may be continued daily with benefit.

Love's Labour Lost (R. R.).—(1) I cannot tell what may be the cause without having full particulars concerning treatment and feeding. The young may die from malnutrition, due to some defect in the digestive organs preventing proper assimilation of food given, but as you say no food appears to be in crops of young at any time, this seems rather insufficient to explain the matter. I would advise you if she has another brood to watch closely to discover whether she really does feed, or whether the motions are all spent on a useless effort to rouse the young and get them to rise for food. Meantime, you might write again, and say how you have been feeding, or look up a few replies on rearing young which have appeared in the last few weeks. (2) Sawdust should not be used in cages during the breeding season. It is very useful during the winter and spring, and also during the moulting season, as it assists materially in keeping the cage floors in a clean and hygienic condition. During the breeding season, however, good clean gritty sand is best.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Rosy Pastors and Cowbirds.

Fags.—The Rosy Pastor is a Starling, glossy black and delicate salmon-pink in colour, a beautiful species, but unfortunately they lose the pink hue in captivity after the moult; nevertheless, even with this drawback they would stand a reasonable chance of success in competition with the species you name, providing they were right in feather and steady. Diet: Live insects, soft food, fruit and green-food. The Ruddy-shouldered Cowbird is also practically a Starling, not so large as the preceding species, but a very handsome species, with glossy, steel-blue plumage, and a shoulder patch of ruddy-orange, which is only visible when the wings are partially outstretched. This species takes some seed, otherwise treat it as the Rosy Pastor. If in perfect condition, it should have a reasonable chance of success against the birds you name.

Birds for Cage.

Rita.—You would find a few Waxbills and a Grey Singing Finch very interesting; get pairs of Green Avadavats, Zebra (golden breasted) and orange cheek Waxbills, and an odd Grey Singing Finch, and you will have interest, song and beauty. Get three cocoanut shell nests and hang them high up, one at each end and the other about the middle of the back of cage—use a couple of twiggy branches as perches. Diet Canary and white millet, also millet sprays, greenfood (flowering grass or lettuce), and a little of any kind of ripe fruit they will take—this with gritty sand, piece of cuttlefish and water for drinking and bathing should keep them fit, in good feather and a source of much pleasure to yourself. Push a little hay into each shell nest, and when obtainable give them a blighty spray from rose or fruit trees, or any non-poisonous plant or herbage—the three pairs should cost about 4s. 6d. a pair, and the Singing Finch about 5s. or 6s. They will use the shell nest as sleeping and resting places. They must have light and air, but must not be subjected to draught. You would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (see advertisement in this column) very helpful.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Burgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Brevities.

What Bird? (Watono).—It is the Spice Bird, also known as the Nutmeg Finch, and will thrive and do well on the same treatment as given to the Black-headed Nun. Briefly as follows: Canary and white millet, also millet sprays, greenfood, cuttlefish, grit and water for drinking and bathing—it is a hardy species, but like all other birds, soon succumbs if subjected to draughts.

Eggbinding (J. C. H.).—Prevention is better than cure; the birds should have access to old mortar rubbish and cuttlebone. If egg-binding occurs, a drop of sweet oil given by means of a quill direct to the mouth, also annointing vent with same should give relief; the bird must be kept warm, and if relief is not given must be held over the steam of a jug of hot water for about five minutes, when, unless there is some internal ruptnre, relief will shortly follow. As regards the pair of birds not nesting, you cannot feed them up; it is a case of patience; an unlimited supply of flowering (seeding) grass will help as much as anything, of course, in addition to the usual diet. You would find our booklet, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (see advertisement in this column) very helpful.

Amazon Parrot Gasping (W. Baker).—Your diet is quite correct excepting the tea soaked bread, stop this at once, and if the bird cries out for it, you can get over the difficulty by just moistening the crust in equal parts of water and Parrish's chemical food. So far as I can gather there is no cause for anxiety and very little the matter with your bird. However, give it, say half a dozen doses Dinneford's magnesia and water in equal parts—with a three days' interval between each dose—this mixture to take the place of drinking water on the day in question. Let it satisfy its thirst at least three times a day. The supply of ripe fruit should be liberal, and may have any kind it will eat. The potato is quite wholesome, providing it is dry, that is quite free from fat. If there should be any further development, repeat query at once.

Shall I cut its tongue (F.T.S.).—No, do not cut its tongue, this is a barbarous practice and will not improve matters at all. Continue the constant repetition method and keep the bird where it will hear plenty of conversation and get also plenty of company—notice what it considers a dainty, take a little of this frequently to the bird, and say something like "somethiug nice for polly." By such methods a Hawk-headed Parrot of mine, not a talking species by the way, has become quite talented talker—only patience and perseverance will accomplish your object. Proceed as above, as the bird becomes interested it will talk more and screech less.

Keeping birds together (A Lover of Birds).—Yes, you may certainly keep Zebra (Golden-breasted) Waxbills and Cordon Bleus together in your cage. Provide ample perching accommodation by placing a twiggy branch at each end of cage, also a cocoanut shell nest. They should be kept warm at first, but at the same time they must get light and air, yet not be subjected to draught, with the addition of a little sponge cake moistened with milk and a few dry ants' cocoons (eggs) now and again. Diet and treat your birds as advised in our reply to "Rita" in this issue. You would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (see advert. in this column) very helpful.

Pekin Robins and Aviary (T. J. J.).—I am still of the opinion that the birds were contaminated when they reached you. I do not think the aviary is at fault, but there certainly should be ample perching accommodation in the angle of the roof, and also on the three wood sides—no perches should be against the open wire sides, this portion being left open for flight purposes. I am of the opinion that you would find the eye lotion named in my former reply help towards a cure. A very liberal supply of insects should be given—garden insects for preference, such as spiders, smooth caterpillars, beetles, almost any insect you can capture, especially live ants' cocoons (eggs), such, while obtainable are far better than mealworms, fall back on the latter when others are not obtainable.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Moulting a Skylark.

Hennessy.—It is sometimes difficult to get Larks to break into moult; still, you need not anticipate that you are bound to have trouble with your own bird. Again, the moult is a natural proceeding, and a bird in good health at the start, and being well and properly fed, is likely to go through without any hitch whatever, though losses will occur, of course, in the best regulated establishments, and cannot be avoided. Some members of the Lark and Pipit family, however, will often go a year or more without, apparently, shedding any of their plumage. Many Lark fanciers endeavour to get their birds to "break" by gradually retiring their cages into a dark corner (or cupboard), or gradually sheeting down their cages with a dark cloth, so that they are, to all intents and purposes, living in the dark. These conditions usually cause a bird to drop into moult. You are feeding the bird in a proper manner by following the advice in the "Nutshell" booklet. Let it have plenty of road-dust, containing some insect powder, to use as its bath, and let it have a tin of good grit to use if it so chooses. Also do not omit to mix some finely-chopped green stuff amongst its food daily, the best possible being young leaves of clover grass. You can ensure a supply of this by keeping a turf or two by you. A few mealworms every day, and a spider or two now and again will also be of much help.

Steadying & Colour-feeding Mule.

Cardiff No. 1.—Young Mules are by nature a "bit lively"—Linnet Mules especially so. What type of cage do you use? The box-pattern (wired at front only) is the correct one. You should house them both in a Finch stock cage, which any up-to-date cage maker will supply. Run them out occasionally into an all-wire "hop" cage, and spray them lightly with water; also let them spend an occasional day or two in a show cage where people are passing to and fro. This will help to steady them. All dark Mules need to be colour-fed to stand any chance of success in keen competition. The pepper used is the tasteless, sweet pepper. It is given them in the same manner as it is given to Canaries. For full details of the process you should consult a good book on Canary keeping, such as "Canary Breeding for Beginners," or Mr. Ramsden's booklet on "Colour-feeding" (both obtainable from this office). An easy way would be to use egg cake. Mix in the colour food in very small quantity at first, to get the bird on to it, gradually working up to full strength, about one part of pepper to four of crumbled egg cake. He should eat a teaspoonful daily. In the drinking water, three times a week, dissolve a tiny pinch of citrate of iron crystals.

Colour-feeding Blackie & Thrush.

J. Sands.—Pleased to hear you are thinking of joining the ranks of exhibitors; it is a fascinating pastime, except, perhaps, to those who cannot endure an occasional "beating," and one cannot reasonably always expect to win. It is true that most of the winning Thrushes and Blackbirds get colour-food during the moult; and it is a "secret" of the old stagers that to keep the birds darkened during the moult results in enhanced colour, especially the Blackies. Tasteless (sweet) pepper should be used, and I never knew a softbill bird yet that would not eat it. Of course, it is necessary to begin with a very tiny quantity, as the change in the colour of the food makes them shy of it unless very gradually brought about. The birds should be kept in a subdued light, out of direct rays of light, especially the rays of the sun. How strong the colour-food should be given depends on the natural colour of the bird. To give a jouque Thrush, naturally a deep brown, the colour-food extra strong, would be to make him unsightly. Such a bird only needs sufficient to slightly enhance its natural colour, and put a gloss on its plumage. One in four (one teaspoonful of pepper to four of food) is strong, and sufficient for most purposes. Perhaps one in six may be quite enough for your Thrush and Blackbird. It must be continued until the moult is right over; for about a fortnight (to be safe) after you cease to find cast feathers in the cage. The last part to finish is generally the head, and the pepper should be given for some little while after pen feathers (or quills) cease to be noticeable thereabouts.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Linnet-Bullie Hybrids.

P. R.—All Bullfinch hybrids are of value from the monetary point of view; if your birds grow into really big ones, then whatever cocks you have will fetch a nice sum—anything from £3 to £5, or even over, if "champions." Pleased to hear of your success. Be careful not to wean the young Hybrids off soft-food too suddenly. Egg-food, when fresh, is a good enough food for me; still, a feed of Osborne biscuit soaked in new milk (or prepared condensed milk) is a fine thing to give. But be careful it is always fresh and sweet; give it in a glass or earthenware dish, and cleanse the latter every time a new supply is offered. At first offer canary seed (the finest quality only), very lightly cracked, as much as they like to eat, with a fair supply of mew seed, cracked hemp seed, and coarse oatmeal. All cracked seed, remember, must be freshly prepared every day. In a day or two, as the youngsters get on, give the canary seed whole, and add a little teazle and genuine summer (sweet) rape seeds. A few crushed sunflower seed, and crushed groats can also be offered. Stop crushing the hemp as soon as the young Hybrids are old enough to crack it, and don't give too much of it; the same remarks apply to the groats if used. It is as well to let their stock mixture be a fairly plain one, giving the oily, stimulating seeds as "tit-bits." The best possible green foods are seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse, giving the ripe heads, and stripping off big, old coarse leaves. These should be freely given. Thistle heads and seeding groundsel tops are also good; while a very little young tender lettuce and watercress can be given if the other things are not easily obtainable. On such a dietary the youngsters should thrive apace. When first separated from their parents, do not allow them to "burst" themselves with water. Give this very sparingly, and it is well to just colour it by the addition of a little Parrish's chemical food.

"Cage Birds" 154 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Brevities.

Cinnamon Mules (Orange Banner).—These "freak" Mules may be dealt with later on. Try pairing a jonque Cinnamon cock to a ben Greenfinch—a steady, moulted hen for preference. A pale (not too light) blue is a fine colour for the inside and wires of the show cage.

A Jay's Feet (Amateur).—Are you feeding the bird properly, and giving it correct (suitable) perches? Wash the feet twice daily in warm water tinged a light red by dissolving in it a few permanganate of potash crystals. Afterwards dry in a soft towel and anoint the parts with a little carbolic ointment. Remove the "scab" as soon as it loosens.

Canary and Hen Bullie (W.H.S.).—Hope nom-de-plume is recognisable; your writing is real hard to decipher. If you run a cock Canary with the hen Bullie right through the winter and spring months, you should stand a reasonable chance of successfully getting fertile eggs from her about next June. Anyway, to do so is quite possible. You would find "Cage Bird Hybrids" (6d. monthly) give you some most valuable hints.

Blue Tits (Blue Tit).—You can do nothing. These birds, in my opinion, are not really "desirable cage birds," for it is very difficult to keep them in health over any lengthy period—they simply droop and die. Your method of feeding is really good, though you could add live ants' eggs in the summer months. The only plan is to let Blue Tits go immediately they show signs of drooping—open the cage door.

A Magpie (Corvus pica).—You were not wise in giving the milk-sop; the soaked puppy biscuits are much to be preferred. I think it likely that the bird has a slight digestive disturbance. But it would be best, if you can manage it, to take him into a warm, dry room for a time; the cold wet weather is very trying. Administer a half-teaspoonful of best olive oil, direct into the beak. Into the bird's drinking water (three tablespoonfuls) stir a teaspoonful of glycerine of thymol (get a small bottle from any high-class chemist). Give it fresh at least once daily; twice would be better. This preparation is not only "good" for the stomach, but for the throat, too, if any trouble exists there.

Young Nightingales (W. F. Wilbee).—You are wrong in thinking that the Nightingale never has more than four eggs in a clutch. Young Nightingales are very grey in colour by comparison with the old birds, and they have spotted breasts (this showing their kinship with the Thrushes); their "stilty" legs, big eyes, and, later, the "flicking" of the tail, help to identify them. You want to read a good book on the subject, and I can thoroughly recommend Mr. Frostick's booklet. "The Moating-off and Feeding of Softbills," which contains most valuable and practical information about the Nightingale (post free, 6½d.). A special Nightingale cage is the best and most convenient to use; the cage-makers advertising in our paper supply them. A mixture of live ants' eggs and crumbled hard-boiled yolk of egg would be the best to hand-feed nestling Gales; moisten it, as required for use, with a little new milk. It must always be quite sweet and fresh.

An Aviary (Brown).— 1. It would hold thirty birds (or thereabouts) comfortably; don't overcrowd in any case. 2. Any of the Finch family (this includes the Buntings) could be put in, and a few Canaries, too; the only one you need bar is the Crossbill, which plays havoc with perches, etc. 3. The simplest way of feeding is, of course, to give Finch mixture, to which has been added a fair sprinkling of sunflower seed. But this is rather wasteful, the better method being to give the chief seeds in separate vessels (say, canary, teazle, hemp, summer rape, and sunflower), and give a mixture of the others in a dish now and again, varied with wild seed mixture. Chickweed, shepherd's purse, groundsel, dandelion, watercress, lettuce, and rape seedlings are all good green foods.

A Mule (J. Smyth).—The opinion I form from your letter is that the Mule is about to go into moult; they then behave just as you describe. It is, of course, quite natural at this time of the year; two of my own Mules are already deep in moult. Keep him out of draughts, and the bird should go on quite satisfactorily. You might one day dissolve a pinch of Epsom salts in its drinking water; just make the latter taste saline. Put a piece of old mortar between the cage wires. Don't give parsley as green food (I have heard it described as "poison" to birds); there are plenty of better kinds. Birds should not be put into newly-varnished (blacked) cages; give the latter an airing first. Nor should they be in a position to peck this black off the cage—from the wires, for instance—it may be poisonous.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

H. F. Butler.—Cock Canary died of pneumonia, contracted through a chill. It was a pity you had not treated him when you first noticed the symptom; it seems like a case that might have recovered.

J. W. Reed.—Hen Canary died of a catarrhal inflammation of the proventriculus (true stomach). It had the appearance of having been in existence for some few weeks. It would cause an unthrifty appearance, inordinate appetite, and imperfect assimilation of the food taken. Had you been systematically dosing it with salts of iron? This is a common cause of the trouble.

C. H. Godwin.—Cerebral apoplexy, or rupture of a vessel on the brain, caused the death. The skull was stained right through with blood, and death arose from pressure. All other organs were quite healthy. It would be predisposed to by too high condition.

Thos. Brown.—Congestion of the lungs accounted for the loss of Border cock, contracted, no doubt, from a chill, or possibly overwarm condition of its surroundings. Either condition will produce it; the lungs become engorged with impure or venous blood, and death results as a rule quickly, depending upon its environs. This is another case that might have recovered with suitable and appropriate treatment.

W. J. Medlin.—The Canary died of the acute form of septic fever. I shall not describe the nature of this disease, for no doubt you are well aware of its serious import, and the proper regime of disinfection to be adopted, together with isolation. There is no curative treatment but a tonic where the disease is imminent is well worthy of trial. Give, therefore, in the drinking water night and morning a few crystals of citrate of iron and quinine just sufficient to colour this medium. Whilst setting apart the healthy birds from the diseased, it must be remembered that the same person must not attend upon both, for, being of a contagious nature, it may be carried by one's clothing, so that all one's expectations are nullified by such neglect to prevent the spread of the disease.

J. Forster.—I received your letter, and have looked up my reply to you. Hens whilst nesting are generally more susceptible subjects to disease, and others even exposed to the same contagion possess much greater powers of resistance. It is not necessary when disease exists of dietetic origin that all should be similarly affected, for if this were the case then the mortality amongst birds would be even greater than it is at the present time. I fully appreciate your careful procedure in the preparation of your egg food, but the post-mortem appearances fully justified my opinion as to the cause of death. Should you have another die, I will examine same free, to thoroughly sift the matter.

H. Eales.—The worms were in a very dry and dilapidated condition, but I was able with the aid of my microscope to make out their species. They are segments of tapeworms, fortunately the head segments, as these seldom come away by themselves, and they are of common occurrence in Linnets. In your drinking water about twice weekly place a little salt, and every third day for three times make a little bread and milk sop, and mix with it half a grain of freshly-powdered areca nut. This you may repeat again after a fortnight's duration.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

A Cutting (Mrs. Sarjeant).—Many thanks for newspaper cutting, and the suggestion, which we will give our consideration.

A Letter (P. Marsdon).—Thanks for letter; contents duly noted.

A Report (A Caution).—Your letter is indeed "a caution." Consider us as duly flagellated.

The Free Holidays Competition (Canvasser).—We do not ask competitors to guarantee that those persons whose signatures they obtain shall become regular readers; it is only necessary that they shall bear signatures of possible regular readers, i.e., interested in bird keeping.

Linnet Singing (J. Walker).—We cannot publish criticisms of judges' awards, unless some good reason be established for so doing. Let us know clearly and briefly who it is you want to challenge, and we will publish your "defy." Your present letter is hard to understand.

Roller Canary Breeding (John Thomson).—Many thanks for your notes, which we shall be pleased to publish. The photograph is, unfortunately, not quite sharp (clear) enough to permit of satisfactory reproduction. We admire the proper spirit which prompts you to try to assist other working-men fanciers by relating your experiences.

Pigeon Query (J. L. Hobbs).—We have forwarded your query to the Editor of "Pigeons," in which journal you will find it answered in due course.

Concerning Two Cuckoos.

Strolling along the bank of a small moorland stream, says a writer in the "Scotsman," I flushed a Meadow Pipit, and on searching the spot found the nest, which contained four of her own dark coloured eggs and two of the Cuckoo. On returning one morning I observed two young Cuckoos in the nest—apparently quite recently hatched—and the three eggs of the Pipit. Two days after the front of the nest was slightly beaten down, and the Pipit's three eggs were lying outside about four inches away, while one of the Cuckoos was also out of the nest and sprawling about, nine inches off; the other Cuckoo was under the foster parent in the nest. I reinstated the evicted Cuckoo, but the possessor evidently wanted the nest for himself, and soon hoisted the other on to its broad hollow back with the aid of its featherless wings. It endeavoured, thus burdened, to move backwards to the edge of the nest, but the captive escaped, sometimes by rolling off and sometimes by crawling forward and over. The aggressive Cuckoo then tried to push the other towards the opening, but the latter retaliated, and round the nest they went, each striving, with occasional breathing spaces, to get the other on to its back. I left them still struggling, as I was able to remain only a short time. When I returned at 11 o'clock on the same day the Pipit had both Cuckoos under her, and peace prevailed. It was only for a short time, however, as the struggle recommenced. The slightly larger one got the other on to its back and worked its way backwards to the edge of the nest. There it stood up, and balancing itself on feet and wing points, tilted the weaker brother out of the nest and a few inches down the gentle slope. Both birds contested every bit of the way, and tried to clinch the edge of the nest for support. The ejected bird managed to scramble back into the nest, and there they both lay quietly resting for a few minutes. Then another tussle began, and the weaker bird was again ejected in the same manner. This time it fell further down the slope and lay there exhausted and helpless. Neither of them could see; it was all done by "feeling," their big eye sockets being covered with membrane.

THE BIRD-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

"Eggs and Nests of British Birds." By Frank Finn, B.A. (Oxon), F.Z.S., etc. Messrs. Hutchinson and Co. (Paternoster Row, London). Price 6s.

Mr. Frank Finn's works merit their popularity for the thoroughness and accuracy which stamp every one of them. But another, and if anything greater, reason why they deserve to be popular is to be found in the fact that their author's style is of that rare quality, which combines technical knowledge and accuracy of detail with freedom from irritating (to the lay reader) scientific terms. His writings are at once a pleasure and an education to read—never tiresome, and always instructive.

In his latest work, "Eggs and Nests of British Birds," Mr. Finn has produced a book which, we are confident, will rank second only to his "Birds of the Countryside," to which, indeed, it is a companion volume, being published in the same series, and at the same price. It aims at conciseness in the giving of facts relating to the eggs and nests of British species; and careful perusal enables us to unhesitatingly say that the book is authoritative and reliable. The eggs and nests of no fewer than 250 odd birds are considered (some of them come under the heading of "Birds Not Breeding in Britain"). These are grouped under seven headings. In the first—"In Towns and Gardens"—we, of course, are brought into touch, as it were, with such species as the House and Hedge Sparrows, Starlings, Robins, Thrushes, Blackbirds, Tits, and various familiar Finches. The nest is described, and the reader learns where he may expect to find it. Then the eggs are described—their colouration, number, and size—and facts of incubation given, etc. Next we are given valuable information about the young, the breeding quarters of the species, and its range over the British Isles and elsewhere. And this plan is adhered to more or less rigidly throughout. But our author never once lapses into the merely stereotyped; he aims at sustaining the interest of his readers, and does not fail so to do.

"Domestic," as its owner is, the Sparrow's nest is the first one anybody is likely to see; it is hardly a case of "finding" it, as the bird generally succeeds in unconsciously advertising its presence by leaving some of the material hanging about if it is in a hole, while, when among ivy, or the branches of a tree, its bulk betrays it. Seldom, however, is it low down enough to be within human reach; the Sparrow's long association with man has taught him to take that much precaution, at any rate. The nest is of the domed type, very coarsely constructed, with abundance of straw, hay, or any such material, and well lined with abundance of feathers. The Sparrow is ambitious in the matter of furniture, and it is a common sight to see him struggling valiantly to carry off a straw or feather several times as long as himself. The male does most of this work; it is comparatively uncommon to see the hen taking home material for the nest. . . . The eggs number usually from four to six, and are exceedingly variable, not only in colour, but also in shape; the normal colour is white, speckled with drab, grey, or black, and the amount of the spotting varies a great deal, as also does the shape of the eggs, though the general tint is less variable than in many other birds. Young Sparrows, it should be mentioned, differ from the young Finches in general, showing some long down on the head and back. Although it does not usually begin breeding so much out of season as the Thrush and Robin often do, the Sparrow commences operations early in March, and raises nest after nest all through the summer up to September, so that its great numbers need not give any cause for surprise. The Sparrow is found as a breeding species over our islands, generally, and extends eastwards across Europe and Temperate and Tropical Asia; by introduction it also inhabits Australia, New Zealand, and North America. The male is distinguished from all our small birds by his grey, chocolate-bordered cap, and black bib; the hen is of the streaky brown commonly found in small birds, without conspicuous head-colouring.

The second and third parts of the book deal with birds that are to be found "By Wayside and Woodland," such as the Cuckoo (we note, incidentally, that more space is devoted to a consideration of this species than of any other), Tree Sparrow, Linnet, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Nuthatch, Blackcap, Magpie, Larks, Buntings, Chats, etc. Birds that are to be found nesting by the waterside form the subject of part four, and these include the Wagtails, some of the Warblers, Waterfowl, etc., all of which are treated with a conspicuous thoroughness. Under the heading of the fifth part, viz., "By Mountain, Marsh, and Moor," such species as the Ring Ouzel, Meadow Pipit, Wheatear, Bearded and Crested Tits, Twite, etc., are considered. Part six is devoted to the sea and shore birds, such as the Rock Pipit, Raven, Chough, Gulls, etc.; and part seven to "Birds not Breeding in Britain."

The volume contains twenty coloured plates of eggs (154 in number), and there are besides half-tone illustrations of the white, etc., eggs (74 in number), and of nests, young, etc. The value of these plates is of a very high order; they are splendidly accurate examples of colour work. The author, referring in the introduction to colour variation in eggs, says: "The black and white plate of Sparrows' eggs will give a good idea of range of variation in the above respects, and, if carefully studied, will better prepare the student of eggs for what he may expect in the way of varietal eccentricities than any amount of separate description of such." We cordially commend "Eggs and Nests of British Birds" to all lovers of British bird life; to the young students of bird life this volume should prove a true "guide, philosopher, and friend." It is very cheap at the published price, 5s., and would make a lovely gift book.

FRIEND OF BRITISH BIRDS.

A New Cage Bird Society for Ashley and District.

SIR,—An adjourned meeting was held at the Crown Hotel, on Wednesday, June 29, when the desirability of forming a Cage Bird Society for Ashley and District was considered. Mr. G. Backhouse, presided. After discussion it was resolved to form the society. Several were enrolled as members. Mr. Toyne was elected treasurer, and Mr. G. A. Clark, secretary. The meeting was then adjourned to the 13th July, to consider and adopt rules and elect a committee.

A Recipe for a Washable Distemper.

SIR,—Having seen the numerous recipes for washable distempers that have appeared in CAGE BIRDS, and having given one myself, I am sending an idea that may prove of service to those who require a washable distemper. On looking through an old trade journal I saw that a recipe for a distemper that would not be removed by rain was required. The correspondent was advised to first give the wall a coat of solution of silicate of soda in water, and then a coat of ordinary limewash. It was said, that the soda transformed the lime into insoluble silicate of lime, and it would not wash off. It might be possible to make a solution of silicate of soda in water and slake the lime with that, and apply it that way; and it would, of course, save time. My own cages don't require doing out at present, or I should have tried the experiment before writing. If anyone cares to try it, will they kindly let me know through CAGE BIRDS, how it acts? The soda waterglass can be obtained at the chemists, and is also used for preserving eggs.

The Parrot in the Home.

SIR,—Parrots being, as we are all aware, foreign birds, need to have their habits very carefully studied until we find out the most suitable treatment to give them. The first thing to do is to prepare a suitable living cage for them, one that is good and strong, and as indestructible as possible. It is better to give a few shillings more and have a good one at the first, because a Parrot will be sure to test the make of it for you. Then go to the tinner and ask him to make you a false bottom for your cage; this will save your cage, and be handy for cleaning out. Mine measures fourteen inches across and two inches deep, and I have had it for about two years, it costing me a shilling. Then as to perches; I get an old shovel shaft, measure the length I want, saw it off, and then plane it down, leaving both the ends thinner than the middle part, so as to release the grasp of the Parrot's feet. If all is one thickness it is apt to cause cramp, and then a falling to the cage bottom. The swing I make the same (of wood); I have no tinned ends, as I think that it is a great mistake to have them, seeing they, too, will cause cramp. Why not get a piece of hard wood, such as birch, for whenever you make a perch of soft wood the Parrots will nibble it all away. Always keep plenty of sand at the bottom of the cage to keep it as dry as possible for the refuse. And clean the cage out often; I clean mine out three times a week. Cleanliness, remember, means a longer, healthier life for the bird, and a longer one in your possession. My advice is, above all, clean the cage out often—the food vessels, too, and give often fresh, clean water. If you do not give your mind to these things at the commencement, your hobby is sure to be a loss to you. Keep the cage clean, and your action will be an example to those who see your bird or birds. As to food, I give as a regular diet, sunflower (mixed), ½lb. dari, ½lb. of Canary, and half-pound of wheat; with fruit, such as oranges, banana, apple, and all kinds of nuts. Never give meat or you will find your bird will pull its feathers out. Meat irritates the blood. Never give sops from the table. A piece of dry biscuit, however, they like now and again, and a piece of raw potato. In choosing a Parrot, if it is in good health, you will find its feathers tight and compact, and not ruffled or scraggy; the eyes will be bright and bold, with no running at the nostrils (which is a bad thing for Parrots). The birds need to be cared for like ourselves. Keep them warm, free from draughts, and as comfortable as you can possibly make them. Treat them kindly, and be good to them; they will then repay you. I have had an African grey for six or seven years, and she is a grand companion, too. I have also two lovely Song Thrushes, two Canaries, and one Linnet; but old Polly is my preference, and I would sooner sell anything in the house than my old favourite. I am only a working man, and I honestly say that it seems to me the best hobby for a working man's spare time. Many a night I find my Parrot waiting at the inside of the door for my return home from work, and greets me with "Hello, hello, Willie," "Call your old Polly," "Come and scratch." But she wants scratching till ten or eleven at night. I can work or do any little odd jobs in the house with her on my shoulder, where she will be chatting and talking to me. Sometimes I may fall asleep on a chair near the fire; she will do the same, and then let anyone come near me! She is a good guard—like a dog. She sleeps with one eye open ready for intruders. The other day two ladies asked her if she could talk, and she answered "No"; and a few months ago the baker's man called, opened the door, and enquired if my wife wanted a brown loaf; Polly said "No." Baker said, "Shall I call to-morrow," Polly shouted "No." My wife, being up in the bedroom, listened to all going on, and saw the baker walk away as though she had answered him herself.

Proposed New Cage Bird Society for Old Cumnock and District.

SIR,—I should like to bring the above matter to the notice of those of your readers who reside in this district. In conversation with a few fanciers in this district it seems there is a desire on the part of many that such a Society should be formed, say, with a radius of 10 miles from Old Cumnock, which would not interfere with the work of the Ayr and Kilmarnock District Societies. I have already got the promise of about 20 members, and am sure there will be many more that I have not had the pleasure of meeting who will wish to join and get the advantages of such a society. Will all interested please meet in the Public Hall, Auchenleck, at 4 p.m., on Saturday, July 16th., when arrangements for same can be made? Will anyone who wishes to become a member and is unable to attend the meeting please send me their name?

The Whitethroat as a Pet.

SIR,—The Whitethroat is one of our most common migratory birds. He has a very pleasant song, and makes a very interesting cage bird. He is also very attractive for an aviary. For some reasons we do not see many exhibited by the lovers of Softbills. Some years ago I was never without one or two, but we generally caught them on their arrival, although I have hand-reared them quite successfully, and that over 15 years ago, before we had such a good supply of insect food as at the present time. I successfully raised mine on ants' eggs, mealworms, and other insects, with the yolk of hard-boiled egg made quite sloppy. But all soft-billed birds I have found are much easier to raise on the proper food than the hard-billed ones. Mine opened their mouths better for food than the others. It is always better to have them too young than too old. For that reason they should be kept covered up and warm. I have found that the young raised by hand do not live so long as the caught ones. If kept in cages they should be always scrupulously clean, and well supplied with ripe fruit, of which they are generally very fond. Many a bird have I had which has been caught in the nets round the fruit trees. But I much prefer a spring-caught bird to an autumn-caught one. In winter, when I could not get any ripe fruits, I used to bake an apple or pear, and put some honey on it, which they would relish very much, also ripe grapes and shop currants (both soaked and dry). I also used to chop up raisins in the stock mixture; by this method I had one bird for over seven years, and a very interesting pet he was. Didn't he enjoy his bath on warm days! All through the summer he was kept out of doors in a good-sized cage, where he was able to catch many flies and other insects from the climbers which hung upon the wall near by.

Proposed New Cage Bird Society for Evesham and District.

SIR,—At the express wish of several prominent cage bird fanciers in Evesham and District, I have decided to call a meeting in order to establish a society for Evesham and District. The meeting will be held at the King's Head Hotel, Evesham, on Tuesday evening, July 12th, at 8 p.m. prompt. Fanciers in Evesham have at present exceptionally little scope for knowing each other to their mutual advantage, and it is in the hope that good in this direction will result from the meeting that I am influenced in calling it. I am, myself, only a new hand in the Fancy, and have no means of knowing who are fanciers, and who are not; but I feel that if a society is started, this difficulty will be removed. Fanciers in the Vale of Evesham, one of the prettiest and healthiest spots in the whole of the United Kingdom, are extremely well favoured by nature in the hobby of bird keeping. We have the beautiful fresh air and sunshine so essential to birdie life, and also an unbounded supply of green and other foods. Thus it has seemed strange to me that a society for the encouragement of the hobby does not exist. I strongly appeal to all local fanciers to rally together next Tuesday evening and give the Society a bumping start. Remember, united we stand, divided ——. I should like to ask all local fanciers who read this to make a point of mentioning it to friends who, perhaps, do not at present take in this valuable paper, and so help to secure a representative gathering.

Amongst the Birds at Harrogate.

SIR,—Having been on a "too short a holiday" at Harrogate, I thought that a few remarks about the birds I saw might perhaps be of interest to some of the readers of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. The countryside round about Harrogate simply abounds with wild birds, some of them so rare that it was a real treat to a northerner to see them. On a beautiful day in the early part of June, a companion and I had a walk as far as Beckwithshaw. Upon our journey we saw a Blue Tit going into a hole in a tree, where (we could hear) were a number of little ones; but it was not easy of access to either my companion or me. On the opposite side of the roadway there was a plantation where we saw several Whitethroats, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Warblers, etc., and the cry of the Cuckoo was to be heard on every side. Upon reaching Beckwithshaw, we turned down a lane that leads to Killinghall. On each side of this lane, there is a plantation of pine trees, which gives off a healthy aroma. Here we saw several Redstarts—species I have never before had the pleasure of observing in their wild environments; and no words of mine can express the pleasure I derived during this particular walk. Reaching the bottom of this lane, we turned and came through a beautiful valley, overlooked on the east side by a magnificent hill, known as "Birk Crag." A brook runs through the centre and is alive with trout, gudgeon and eels. Here we had a brief rest. While so doing, we saw the Cuckoo several times. We also saw Skylarks, Tit Larks, Meadow Pipits, Thrushes, Goldfinches, Missel Thrushes, Blackbirds, Golden-crested Wrens, Willow Wrens, Jenny Wrens, Chaffinches, Whitethroats, Starlings, Linnets, Twites, Greenfinches, Bullfinches, Yellowhammers, Yellow Wagtails, Pied Wagtails, Dippers, etc. As tea time was fast approaching, we had to make a move, still having a good walk to our lodgings. On the journey we found several nests containing young, but we did not disturb them. It happened, however, that I saw a Wren making its way along a ledge on a sandy bank; looking closer, we found the nest. As I was putting my hand in to examine the contents I was surprised to see seven young ones fly out, one going up my coat sleeve, giving me quite a shock. We succeeded in catching five others, but, as I have already stated, I allowed them to go. We found several nests of Brown Linnets, containing newly-hatched young. We also saw a good many young Robins, Thrushes, Blackbirds, Starlings, etc., just newly come from the nest. On June 16th a party of us went by char-a-banc to Ripon, and thence to Fountain's Abbey. On the journey we saw a good deal of bird life. In one field we saw a pair of old Plovers, with a number of young running at their feet. We heard the Landrail several times on our journey. There were hundreds of Martins, Swifts, and Swallows skimming across the waters of the beautiful lakes and brooks that are to be seen in the abbey grounds. Warblers, Flycatchers, Bullfinches, Chaffinches, Whitethroats, etc., seemed to abound in these grounds. I would advise anyone who has not had the pleasure of visiting Fountain's Abbey to do so, as it is a most interesting and instructive sight. We had our lunch in the grounds. While sitting at the table a lovely Chaffinch came close to my feet and ate of some crumbs I threw down; and several Swallows came skimming over our heads into the eaves of the building into their nests, where I could hear the young ones chirping. Several ducklings were to be seen on the waters. After lunch we had to prepare for Harrogate, about sixteen miles distant. Having four good horses, we soon accomplished this, and happily terminated a pleasant day's outing. Another day we spent at Knaresborough, a quaint old town on the Nidd, almost surrounded by plantations which are full of bird life. While there, we had the pleasure of seeing a Blackcap. We also saw a White-throated Dipper taking his ablutions in the Nidd. We also saw several Wagtails enjoying themselves jumping from stone to stone catching flies.

A Useful Detachable Perch.

SIR,—I find this very useful in the case of high front rails to all kinds of box cages where birds cannot reach their food with comfort, and also in the washing and painting of same. All one requires is the perch cut to length and two pieces of malleable wire.

A Useful Moveable Perch.

Bend the wire to the shape and leave about an inch at right angles to hammer into the ends of perch. Pierce holes in the front rail by seed or water holes, whichever the case may be, and insert the wire holders. Loose fronts may then be fitted over. The drawing will explain all that is necessary.

A Hybrid Breeder's Experiences.

SIR,—I promised I would let you know about Mr. Raper's (of Kirkham Abbey) Hybrids. Up to the present he has two Goldie-Greenie Hybrids; and two beauties they are! He has had the misfortune to lose one, as he left the cage door open in the aviary, and when he opened the aviary door the Hybrid escaped. The bird has been seen about here, but up to the present he has not succeeded in capturing it. He also has two very nice Linnet Mules, and the father is a topper—a very nice, long bird. He has also two Bullie hens paired up to two lovely Goldies, and has had about 20 eggs this season, but as yet he has not been able to rear any young. I saw one lot of eggs he had taken away from the Canary which was sitting on the the eggs, and one was fertile, but I have every confidence he will have some before the season is over, as he knows how to handle them. He has a Greenfinch hen. He tells me she will go every time with the Goldfinch, and nearly all eggs full. She is a beauty, rather inclined to be a buff colour, but I noticed that she had something the matter with her one eye, and he told me he had lost several birds (hybrids) through their losing sight. I told him I thought it was the lime on the boards of the aviary. As you know, when a wooden shed has been whitened with lime, and also all breeding cages, the lime will flake off, and when perches run up to the ends and back of cages the birds will rub their beaks and heads against the woodwork, and the lime gets into their eyes. I was very sorry to hear he had lost such good birds through this cause, especially a Goldie-Bullie; but, anyhow, these gentlemen know their business, and I should like to know as as much.

Bullfinches at St. Mary Church Show.

SIR,—At St. Mary Church Show, held last week, I exhibited a Bullfinch which the judge, to use his own words to the committee, said was a "clinker and in splendid fettle"; but as he thought it was "not a Britisher nor cage-moulted," he asked the chairman and secretary what he should do. He was told to use his own judgment, with result mentioned, although he admitted it as the best in its class. Now the bird was caught here in the neighbourhood of St. Mary Church, and was bought by me over two years ago. It has been shown three times before under different judges, and won twice out of the three times. As a special prize is given at annual show for points won at the quarterly, and I, by the judge's decision, lose prize and points, I am asking by brother bird fanciers what they would do under the circumstances, seeing I have proof of what I have stated to show the committee. The judge thought the colour too good for a cage-moulted bird, which I consider a great deal in its favour. Thanks to an article in your valuable paper some time ago as to what berries, etc., should be given them, I followed this, the result being the grand "fettle" it was in.

ROBT. WILLS.

A New Society for Chopwell and District.

SIR,—In answer to "True Fancier," I am quite aware a man can please himself what he does; but where is the honour attached to the action of this man? I say the distance is no more than a mile and a half. I say that the Derwent Valley Society has done all in its power to promote the Fancy at Chopwell. Are we down hearted? Please see entries for first feather show—a record. Not much here to be down hearted about! Note "True Fancier's" letter. He says this new society was got up to do no harm, and yet he admits the dispute about prize money. The Derwent Valley Society, at their last open show agreed to pay members' classes, 17s. 6d. per class, the same as in the open. In the result they found they could not pay it, I am sorry to say; but where will you find any society that can do this? A social was got up to try and pay this money in full, but all they could make out of same was 30s. At a meeting following, this 30s. came up for discussion, and it was decided by a majority of the members that this 30s. lie in the funds, with the result that a prominent member of the new Society got up and walked out of the meeting, his heart having failed him. This member had already got £2 2s. 6d prize-money, not including specials. Other members wanted up to 16s. 6d., but these members were the means of the 30s. lying in the funds, so as not to leave the Society "stoney-broke." At a later meeting this 30s. was brought up again by one of the new Society, who said we were only driving members away. Our chairman replied, that if those were the sort of members the Society was composed of, the sooner it was broken up the better—not (as "True Fancier" said) "let them all go, we can do without them." I beg to contradict him as to this.

DERWENT LAD.

More Mules from Mules.

SIR,—I believe I have read our paper, CAGE BIRDS since its first issue, and I have read many wonderful things in it, in fact, everything one wants to know about birds of all kinds—British and Foreign, and of many freaks whose parentage has been disputed. But facts are "chiels that win na ding an dare na be disputed." I have bred birds (Hybrids and Mules, and Canaries) for over twenty years, but have never had the good fortune to get young birds from a Mule, as Mr. Murray has, but I have always believed it possible. I would not have troubled you with this letter had Mr. Murray not recorded his success in getting young birds from a cock Linnet Mule, and Norwich hen Canary. I may state that he will have competition, as I had the pleasure of visiting a young fancier of two years' standing, who also has bred Mules from a Mule. He lives three and a half miles from me, but I was proud to go and see his young birds. I know many fanciers, like myself, who have tried but failed. Some are fortunate that do not try, but just have two or three birds together and look for nothing. It is here where the surprise comes in. This young fancier had a large sized Norwich hen Canary, and no mate for it. She was anxious to go to nest in sight of a Goldfinch Canary Mule who apparently had mated. To save cage cleaning he put the two birds together and the hen laid four eggs. After she had been sitting eight or nine days he broke two of the eggs, and they were both good, so he allowed the hen to sit and hatch the other two, the young from which are now six weeks old, one a cock, the other a hen. To my mind they are a cock and hen, for the cock bird shows its parentage very well—mind you, three-quarter Canary. They are good, large Norwich type birds. He wanted to know if he could show them as Norwich, or Mules. But I told him he could not show them unless as freaks—they do not show enough of the Finch to allow of their being exhibited as Mules, and it is clearly shown they are not Canaries; at least the young cock has the golden outside flights of the Finch, also the bar on the wing. Both are lightly variegated. The hen, or mother, I should say, is sitting on another three eggs, which I believe are fertile also, from same cock Mule. Anyone wishing to see them can call at the following address, when the owner will be pleased to show the parents and young. He is anxious that some one who is a Mule fancier of good standing and knows what he is looking for would see them, the address is:—Mr. Henry Michie, 5, Condy's Row, Coalsnaughton, by Tillicoultry, Clackmannshire, Scotland.

D. HARROWER.

SIR,—I duly received the body of the bird which Mr. Murray (of Sunderland) states was bred between a cock Linnet Mule and a hen Canary. Examination at once convinced me that the Linnet entered into the parentage—this was quite unmistakable—but whether as father or grandfather could not possibly be determined, for this, of course, was but an immature bird (in nest feather), and the fact that it was dead did not help matters. I shall, by courtesy of Mr. Murray, be interested to inspect, when they are ready, the young birds he still has alive. I may say that I see no reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement that these youngsters have a Linnet Mule as one parent; the fact that most of them are bred light in plumage—some nearly clear—would seem to bear it out, inasmuch as the percentage of Canary blood in them is so much higher than in the case of Linnet Mules proper. A nice point seems to arise, viz., are they eligible to be exhibited as Mules? Defining a Mule as a cross between a British bird and a Canary, then they are not. But my own present impression is that these birds could not be distinguished from ordinary Mules. In that case, a judge would be helpless to detect them. And that a bird so light in plumage as is one of Mr. Murray's cross-breds would command a high place in the prize-list can hardly be doubted. I wonder if the Mule that will fertilise eggs opens up for us a new road to the breeding of "light Mules"? Taking Mr. Murray's experience in conjunction with that of Mr. Farrance (vide CAGE BIRDS of June 25), there would seem to be something in it.

Country Rambles

Barnsley and District C.B.S.

The first of what it is hoped will be annual events, a country ramble, took place on June 19th. To the members and friends who took part in the event it was a great success. The party, numbering twenty. The place selected was Stainbro' Park, and the meeting place Stainbro' Inn, at 10 a.m., where the party all turned up in good time. The following gentlemen were present: Messrs. J. Eyre (president), H. J. Simmons, J. Springthorpe, J. Simmons, W. Rapson, W. Atherton, J. Taylor, D. Williams, A. W. Taylor, P. Taylor, T. Harley, J. Hinchcliffe (assist. secretary), F. Race, G. Marson, H. Watkin, T. Thorpe, W. Denton, W. Tattersal, E. Tolson, and F. C. Sims (the secretary). Messrs. E. Tolson and W. Denton kindly brought with them their cameras. Before starting a Blue Tit's nest was espied in a wall close by, and it contained young ones; also a Thrush and Blackbird's nests were found with eggs and young, and a Skylark's with eggs on the way to the place appointed to meet. At 10.30 o'clock our worthy president led the way through the beautiful park lodge gates. In glorious sunshine we strolled slowly up the carriage drive till we came to the Serpentine, a beautiful sheet of water, with a lovely bridge. We stood there a few minutes admiring the captivating notes of the Cuckoo. As we turned to make another start we espied across the park a fine herd of deer, also some cattle. Here the birds were singing their lovely songs, which it delighted one's heart to hear. We came to the magnificent hall, the seat of Captain Wentworth, with its splendidly kept lawns and flower beds. As we went slowly up the park we saw some black sheep with white spots on them. We passed through a grand keeper's lodge; the keeper is a Canary breeder, and we found he had twelve young on the sticks, and were invited (some of us) to look at them. The birds were kept on the ground floor. Hereabouts we heard the Bullfinch, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Whitethroat, Reed Warbler, Yellowhammer, Peggy, and Cuckoo. A Jenny Wren's nest was found, and a Greenfinch's with five eggs; and a Blackbird's with five eggs. The next place of mention was "Rocky Dam," a fine sheet of water, with magnificent waterfalls. Here we saw some grand water fowl, and we were particularly struck by the blooms of the lilac, laburnum, and hawthorn. As we wended our way slowly we came to a magnificent avenue of beeches. Advantage was taken of a nice shaded corner to have a rest. Again we made a start through the shaded avenue, and arriving at the end we viewed a monument called "Cain and Abel," where we tried to face the camera smilingly for the first time; after which we viewed the apparatus for Pheasant rearing, the pens being at suitable distances apart, and kept under the watchful eye of the keepers both day and night. We were now nearing the other side of the park, and were in sight of the keeper's lodge. We passed through the large gates, and were then out of Stainbro' Park. We proceeded into the village called Birdwell, and, having reached the "Cock Inn," all were ready for refreshments, and justice was done to a cold luncheon, which was enjoyed by all. A restart was made one 1.45. We viewed the Marble Arch, and were soon on the Lord Wharncliffe Estate, with its beautiful woodlands. Here again the Greenfinches' nests were found, and the Chaffinch calling his "Pink, Pink." Passing Hermit Hill, across the fields to Cranemoor, where the Larks were pouring out their pretty notes and the Cuckoo was seen. We came to a shady spot, where we halted for a while to view the lovely country. After an interval we strolled on to Cranemoor, when all were ready for refreshment, which, as the sun was blazing hot, a call was made for. After this we proceeded to Thurglong, where all sorts of birds were seen and heard too numerous to mention. Many birdy matters were discussed until we found ourselves at Berrymoor. We rested at a running stream, and indulged in a good drink of "Adam's wine" out of Mr. P. Taylor's cup, which, when shut up, was like a watch—quite a novelty. After leaving this delightful spot the party made their way towards Silkstone Common Station, and altogether a very pleasant day was spent. So enjoyable was it that it was talked on that another ramble should be arranged for shortly. Due notice of this will be given in the Press.—F. C. SIMS

Coventry Godiva C.B.S.

The first annual outing took place to Pailton on June 26, where we visited an old fancier, Mr. Dickins, with whom we stayed for the day. After taking dinner we all set out in different directions in pursuit of the birds and nests. By the kind permission of Mr. Dickins we were allowed to roam at our leisure on the railway banks and also the ground adjoining. There is a nice spinney close bandy to which most of our members were soon making their way among the bushes to see what was to be found. Several of the members soon came across a nest or two, including a Linnet's, a Yellow Bunting's, and a Blackbird's. After a good ramble we partook of tea, after which we investigated another part of the land. We found a Bullfinch's nest with eggs. We also made a call at the "White Lion," at Pailton, where the landlord showed us a Flycatcher's nest with young, in the fork of a tree which is trained on the wall. He also informed us that the same pair of birds had built there for the last seven years always in the same place. We had a look at Mr. Dickins's birds. He has a grand lot of youngsters, mustering 60 in all on the sticks. It rather surprised us to see the quantity of British birds he was rearing under the Canaries; I should think there were about 40 or 50 Linnets besides Bullfinches. After having another stroll round we made our way back to Coventry, having an enjoyable outing. We met the Leicester C.B.S. members over there, and were introduced to them by Mr. Tayler, the secretary, whom we were very pleased to meet.—W. H. BRAY, hon. secretary.

Newcastle C.B.A.

Bothal Haugh, the seat of the Hon. and Rev. W. Ellis, was the selected spot for our ramble this year, and though the numbers who went were fewer than was the case last year, it was voted by all to far exceed the Chotterford ramble. The Rev. Mr. Ellis not only kindly allowed us to visit his grounds, but permitted Mr. Lackey, his bead gardener, to act as guide. Mr. Lackey met us at the station, and conducted us to the magnificent estate, after showing us his stock of British birds, Mules, and Norwich. Words fail me to describe the beauty of Bothal Haugh grounds, but it will be sufficient to say that they are the most lovely, public or private, that I have personally seen, and the chief regret, nay, the only one, expressed was that more or our members had not availed themselves of the opportunity of seeing them. The chief feature from a botanist's point of view were the number of variegated and albino trees, including lime, sycamore, dogwood, and many others. From a bird-lover's point of view the chief thing was the quantity of birds; there were a great many, and almost every species known in the North. In one row of cyprus trees there were two or three nests in every tree; in fact, there were so many that Jimmy Bertram and Jack Curry forgot all about the rain when the rest of us ran for shelter. But the weather soon "faired" up, and under Mr. Lackey's leadership we saw as much of the beauties of the place as time would allow. Leaving Bothal and the ladies of our party, we took the path through the woods to Morpeth, where we did ample justice to a good tea, and returned home much refreshed in mind though tired in limb.—T. C. CRAWHALL, secretary.

The first of the annual nest feather shows was held July 2, in the Viaduct Temperance Hotel, when there was only a moderate entry. Judge, Mr. J. Dixon (Wigton). But what was lacking in quantity was made up in quality, there being some good specimens of all varieties.

We had a fairly good members' show on July 2nd—over 60 entries, these being judged by Mr. W. Mundell, who had 10 classes before him of decent quality. Although the weather was wet, we had a good lot of visitors, who seemed generally well pleased with the awards of Mr. Mundell. The settling up at the close concluded a pleasant and satisfactory show day.

COVENTRY O.S.

First Feather show held at Sydenham Palace, Ford Street, Coventry, July 2. The birds taken as a whole were of very good quality, though scarcely so numerous as last year. Crests, Crest-breds, and Cinuamons were specially commendable, and the Plainhead Norwich were above the average. The British section was very good, too, a very steady Nightingale, and a pretty Bearded Tit attracting most attention. The Foreign birds were in good condition, but all of the smaller species. We had a disappointing attendance of visitors, which was due to the very stormy weather experienced during the afternoon and early evening.

PLUMSTEAD & WOOLWICH C.B.S.

The First Feather Show was held in Holy Trinity Schools, on July 2nd. The entries were only small, owing to the difficulties which have beset the society since the last annual show. Messrs. Dibley and Meades have recently been appointed joint secretaries. Some very nice quality birds were shown, amongst which special mention should be made of Mr. Weaver's yellow Border Fancy, which won the special for best Canary in the show, the Norwich of Messrs. Dibley, Holt, Wood, Woolgar, and Miller. Britisb were a nice little lot, and the special for the best fell to a Bullfinch shown in splendid fettle by Mr. Meades. The birds were nicely staged, and presented a pretty appearance. Owing to the non-advertising of the show, and the unpropitious state of the elements, the attendance was only moderate. the new secretaries are hoping to get things in good working order straight away, and ask the assistance of all interested in bird life in the neighbourhood to join, and aid the committee in making the society a credit to the district. Mr. C. A. House judged.

CITY & SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Annual young bird show, held July 2, at headquarters, The Church Institute, Paddington-st., W. Everything considered, it proved a splendid success, though the clerk of the weather did his utmost to put a damper on the affair, and the absence of Mr. Wynn (the best of secretaries), due to the feared passing away of his father, was much felt, and on every side were heard expressions of sympathy from those who knew of the sad trouble which had befallen him. There was an exceptionally good attendance, those who chanced the rain (to say nothing of thunder and lightning) had some grand birds to look over, for although the entry was down a bit on the whole, the quality of the exhibits was well above the average. The entry in the Canary section was smaller than usual, a bad first round being largely responsible, we heard. The novice Yorks., however, were a bright exception—22 birds in one class and 11 in the other. The handsome "Daintry" challenge cup for best young bird in the show fell to Mr. J. Burton, who put down a really charming yell. Yorks., a lengthy youngster of rare quality, beautifully drawn and moulded, bard to find a fault with. A very good Yorks. shown by Mr. W. Sanders secured the medal for best novice Canary. Mr. Pile won the handsome special for most entries; Mr. Elgar for best young Hybrid; Mrs. G. E. Weston for best Britisb. The room was handsomely decorated with cut flowers, by the generosity of Mr. J. Burton, and the able stewards were Messrs. A. W. Curtis, A. W. Hart, Parkhurst, Burton, and Saytch, while Mrs. Wyse, Mrs. Maher, Miss G. Shepherd, and Messrs. W. Shepherd, Curtis, junr., and Pickard, junr., gave much appreciated assistance. Messrs. J. WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Young bird show held at 6, The Broadway, on July 4. The entries far exceeded all previous records, the total entry being 104, as compared with 74 last year. There was a splendid collection of Yorkshires—especially in the champion and novice sections.—As for quality, nothing so superb has before been seen at Wimbledon. The Border Fancies made a brave show and beat any class of the same kind ever before shown at Wimbledon. A great attraction was a grand array of foreign birds, not for competition, kindly exhibited by the Countess von Hahn, which included Budgerigars, Pekin Nightingales, Red-headed Lovebirds, Red-crested Cardinals, and German Siskins. Countess Von Hahn, who had recently joined the society, had taken a keen interest in the show, and was present. Another exhibit not for competition was a pied Robin, caught in Wimbledon, which was shown by Mrs. Owen, of Woodside. Mr. J. Robson judged. The diploma for the best bird in champion section was won by Mr. H. Smith, that for best bird in novice section by Mr. S. Wright, and in the amateur section by Miss M. Walker. Special prize for the best bird shown by a lady, won by Mrs. Smith, and for best hird in show, won by Mr. H. Smith, were presented by the Countess von Hahn. The silver medal given by the Society for the best bird shown by a novice, was won by Mr. S. Wright, and the pair of carvers, presented by Mr. T. C. Pickard for best Yorkshire, were won by Mr. H. NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

Young stock show, held at the Library Hall, Church Street, Stoke Newington, June 25th. In spite of the poor season experienced by several of the members, entries turned up splendidly and reached a total of 150, being about 20 in advance of last year's, also creating a record for this association's young bird shows. Unfortunately for the past three years this event has been held during stormy weather, which naturally affected the "gate," but in spite of this we were pleased there was also a record attendance, and catalogues sold out early in the evening. The show was advertised in CAGE BIRDS, which proves the value of advertising these events. All sections turned up well, both Norwich and Yorks. containing some real good birds. The British section was not so large, but some fine birds were shown. The Foreign section, which has usually been very small, came up well, and a very interesting lot they were, judging by the number of visitors admiring them. This association's shows are noted for quality, and this event proved no exception, especially in the novice classes. The arrangements were in the hands of Mr. Harper, the secretary, supported by several good workers of the committee, and a proud lot they were at having such a successful show. Several names were handed in for membership, which was good business, and we hear some good things are in store as specials for the annual show. Mr. J. Robson judged.

SALE & DISTRICT OPEN C.B.S.

Fourth First Feather Show, held July 2nd, at Headquarters. Owing to the breeding season being rather bad, entries were not over plentiful, but what was lacking in quantity was made up in quality; some very promising youngsters were out. Mr. A. Royle (Sale) placed the awards, and gave every satisfaction. Mr. R. Unwin "trotted out" a very good ticked buff Norwich, which took special for best bird. Mr. W. Fildes had two very nice Norwich out, winning section special with his yellow. In the British bird classes some very nice ones were staged, Mr. G. Alcock leading with his well-kept team. Mr. Holt, Master E. Jones, and Mr. C. Wood also had some very nice birds staged. The society is very fortunate in having such a worker as Mr. Ernest Jones (of Hale) who seems never to tire in helping the society. The stewards, Messrs. Wballey and Hickson, gave every attention to staging, looking also after the exhibits. There was a fair attendance, and many of the birds came in for great praise. The secretary, Mr. Jas. Irlam, as usual, had things well in hand, and several of the committee helped.
